

The Capital and the Colonies

London and the Atlantic Economy, 1660—1700

Nuala Zahedieh

^m CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of illustrations	page ix
List of tables	xi
List of figures and maps	xiii
Acknowledgements	xiv
List of abbreviations	xvi
•
1 Introduction	1
2 London and the Atlantic economy	17
London in the late seventeenth century	20
The extension and consolidation of England's New World colonies	27
The institutional framework of England's Atlantic system	35
3 Merchants	55
The structure of London's colonial commodity trade and merchant careers	57
The day-to-day workings of London's colonial trade	65
Commercial innovation	80
The merchants' training	86
Capital, credit, and reputation	90
Merchant associations	103
Trust networks	106
Political networks and rent-seeking activities	113
Wealth accumulation	127
4 Shipping	137
Growth of London's Atlantic freight capacity	137
Ship-owners	144
Ship-building	150
Manpower	159
Port of London	166
Freight rates	173

viii	Contents	>
5	Imports	-	184
	Early expectations and experiments in the New World		185
	Natural bounty		190
	Tobacco		197
	Sugar		210
	Minor staples		226
	Bullion		230
	The impact of the colonial import trade		233
6	Exports		238
	White servants	•	240
	Slave labour		245
	Food and beverages	'	252
	Manufactures	•	257
7	Conclusion	"	280
	Bibliography	' '	293
	Index		322