

What's Māori About Māori Education?

The Struggle for a Meaningful Context

WALLY PENETITO

Rurea taitea, kia toitū

Ko tai kākā anake

Strip away the sapwood
and get to the heart of the matter

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of Figures and Tables	10
Acknowledgements	11
Preface	13
PART I FRAMEWORK FOR ANALYSIS
Introduction to Part I	21
The Problem	21
Structure of Part I	22
Chapter 1 Māori Identity: Being, Learning, Living	25
Introduction: The Emergence of the Problem	25
The Politics of the Education System: Identity, Culture and Context	29
The Politics of Identity: Invention, Construction or Both?	34
Tuakiri Tangata: Identity and the Evolution of Consciousness	40
Agency, Power and Identity	47
Chapter 2 What Counts as Education: Scholarship, Philosophy, Ideology	49
Introduction: The Problem and the Argument	49
Ways into the Study	52
1. Māori Education and Cultural Politics	53
Facing the Bias and Entering into a Philosophical Response	53
Looking at Achievement: The Role of Ideology	57
Looking at Māori Education: Cultural Politics and Ways of Being and Knowing	60
2. Race Relations and the 'Politics of Interpretation'	62
3. Social Justice and the 'Best of Both Worlds'	64
4. Philosophy of Education and the 'Logic of Sameness'	66
Ascertaining Meanings	66
Critiquing the Knowledge Base	68
5. The Sociology of Education and the Sociological Imagination	70
Reading Sociology	70
Creating a Sociology of Māori Education	74
6. The Issue of Mediating Structures	76
Hiding Behind Liberality	76

Chapter 3	What Counts as Maori Education: Socialisation, Education, Dialectic Relationships	80
Introduction:	Two Epistemological Traditions	80
	Māoritanga Model	81
	Liberal Education Model	84
	Setting the Models Side by Side: The Social Control Thesis	86
	Socialisation and Lifestyle	87
	Education and Life Chances	94
	Māori Education and Dialectic Relationships: Native Schools as Transition	97
Chapter 4	Mediating Structures in Māori Education: Connectedness, Consent, Control	102
Introduction:	Accounting for Educational Disengagement	102
	The What and Why of Mediating Structures	105
	Social Expressions of Connectedness in Māori Society	107
	Mediating Structures: Sources of Conservatism or Agents of Change?	109
	The Nature of New Zealand Society and its Education System	110
	Mediating Structures in Māori–Pākehā Relations	113
	Treaty of Waitangi	114
	Native/Māori Land Court	116
	Native/Māori Schools	117
	NZEI–Te Miro Māori	118
	Te Ohu Whakatupu	118
	The ‘Tū Tangata Way’	119
	Mediating Structures in Māori Education: A Sociological Perspective	120
	Functionalism – Reports on Māori Education	120
	Interpretivism – Processes of Consultation	121
	Humanism – Institutional Marae	122
	Structuralism – Māori Medium Schooling	123
	A Theory of Mediating Structures in Māori Education	124
PART II	MEDIATING STRUCTURES IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF MĀORI EDUCATION
Introduction to Part II		129
Chapter 5	‘Our Māoris’: Reports on Māori Education (1960–2000)	135
Introduction:	Finding an Ideology	135
	Methodology, Argument, Approach	138

Reports, Writers, Readers	141
Ka Awbi Noa i Waho, 1960–1977	143
Background	143
Synopsis and Analysis	144
Report 1: Report of the Commission on Education in New Zealand (1962)	144
Report 2: Report of the National Advisory Committee on Maori Education (1970)	146
Report 3: Department of Education, Maori Children and the Teacher (1971)	150
Report 4: Report of the Committee on Communication Between Schools and Parents: Parent–School Communication (1973)	152
Report 5: Report of the Committee on Secondary Education, ‘Towards Partnership’ (1976)	154
Summary, Purposes, Discourses	157
Mā Te Kānohi Miromiro, 1978–2000	158
Background	158
Synopsis and Analysis	160
Report 6: Report of the National Advisory Committee on Maori Education, He Huarahi (1980)	160
Report 7: Review of the Core Curriculum for Schools, Department of Education (1984)	162
Report 8: Report of the Taskforce to Review Education Administration (1988)	165
Report 9: Māori Participation and Performance in Education – A Literature Review and Research Programme, Report for the Ministry of Education (1997)	169
Report 10: Māori Education Commission, Reports for the Minister of Māori Affairs (1998/99)	171
Summary, Purposes, Discourses	174
Māori Education Reports as Mediating Structures	175
Chapter 6 ‘We’re all New Zealanders’: Processes of Consultation in Māori Education	177
Introduction: Participation from Inside–Out	177
We’re all New Zealanders	180
What is Consultation?	181
Constructive Dialogue as the Mode of Inquiry	183

Consultation as the Hegemony of Consent	184
Education Strategy for Māori: Methodological Considerations	185
Working Within the Official Parameters	186
Planning the Consultations	187
Interpretivist–Humanist Sociology: Eliciting the Information	188
An Initial Analysis of the Data	192
Analysis of Question 1	194
Discussion	198
Policy or Politics?	199
Key Issues that Arose	201
Positive Image	201
Support Systems	202
Māori Medium Education	202
An Autonomous Māori Governance Authority	203
Treaty of Waitangi and Mainstream Accountability	204
An Overarching Māori Educational Philosophy	204
Research to Empower Māori	205
Consultation as a Mediating Structure	206
Chapter 7 ‘Tangata Whenua, Tangata Tiriti’: Institutional Marae	208
Introduction: Participation from Outside–In	208
What is a Marae ?	209
Traditional Marae – Tūrangawaewae for Tangata Whenua	210
Institutional Marae – Tūrangawaewae for Tangata Tiriti	212
The Case for Institutional Marae	212
Institutional Marae on Campuses: Reasons for their Establishment	213
Lifestyles or Life Chances	218
Institutional Marae as Mediating Structures	220
Chapter 8 ‘Our Pākehās’: The Onward Rise of Māori Medium Schooling	222
Introduction: Taking Responsibility and Being Equal	222
Finding a Way Through the Web: Structural–functionalist Sociology	225
The Rise of ‘Māori Medium’ Education: A Catalyst for Transformation	227
What is ‘Kaupapa Māori Schooling’?	228
Assertion of Māori Cultural Capital	228
The New Right and the Educational Reforms	230
Cultural Mobilisation	232
Does This Feel like Transformation?	234
Kaupapa Māori Schools as Mediating Structures	235

Contextualising Māori Knowledge for New Zealand Teachers	236
The Moral Dilemma of the Ownership of Knowledge	238
The Relationship Between Particularism and Universalism	239
Distinguishing Socialisation from Education	240
Conclusion	240
PART III PLACE AND THE POLITICS OF WHĀNAU, HAPŪ, IWI AND MĀORI EDUCATION: EDUCATION FOR ALL
Introduction to Part III	245
Mainstreaming and/or Separate Development	245
Beyond Mediating Structures	246
Chapter 9 He Kōingo mo te Tuakiri Tangata – A Hunger for Identity, Meaning and Self-worth	249
The Argument So Far	249
An Education ‘to be Māori’: The Ontological Issue of Identity	250
Toward a Theory of Schooling: The Epistemological Issue of Meaning	255
Whānau, Hapū, Iwi Education: The Axiological Issue of Collective Self-worth	256
The Politics of Educational Change	257
Problem Definition	258
Strategic Directions	258
Assessment and Performance	259
The Best of Both Worlds: A Theory of Education for All	260
Principles for Change	261
Whānau/Hapū/Iwi Education Plans	262
Empowering ‘voices from the margins’	263
Whānau/Hapū/Iwi ‘Identity’ as the Locus of Intervention	265
The ‘mobilisation of bias’	268
Being Māori ‘goes all the way down’	269
Glossary	271
Notes	277
Bibliography	290
Index	308