

SOVIET WORKERS AND THE COLLAPSE OF PERESTROIKA

The Soviet labour process and
Gorbachev's reforms, 1985–1991

DONALD FILTZER

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Preface and acknowledgements	page xi
List of terms and abbreviations	xiv
 Introduction: The roots and limitations of perestroika	 1
 Part 1 Labour policy under perestroika
 1 Attempts to create a labour market: employment, unemployment, and the labour shortage	 15
Specific features of the Soviet labour market under perestroika	17
The management of unemployment: political necessities and institutional realities	31
The labour shortage	47
Conclusion	53
 2 Economic incentives: the disintegration of the 1986 wage reform	 56
The aims and provisions of the reform	59
Results of the reform	60
The fall in the standard of living and the collapse of the reform	71
 3 Political incentives: enterprise 'democratization' and the emergence of worker protests	 78
The false promise of enterprise democratization	82
The mass strikes of 1989 and 1991	94
The limits of worker protests	113

Part 2 Perestroika and the industrial enterprise

4	'Market mechanisms' and the breakdown of economic regulation	125
	Self-financing within the industrial enterprise	128
	The breakdown of khozraschet and the supply crisis	135
	Conclusion	144
5	The labour process under perestroika: 1 The political economy of working conditions	148
	The Crisis of underaccumulation	149
	Working conditions in Soviet industry	155
	Working conditions and the regulatory role of female labour	163
6	The labour process under perestroika: 2 The failure of restructuring	181
	The organization and use of work time	181
	The deterioration of labour discipline	189
	Informal bargaining	193
	The hybrid social form of the product under perestroika	204
	Conclusion: The demise of perestroika and the emergence of class conflict	214
	Notes	225
	Bibliography	278
	Index	285