

Nadia Majid

'My Mother was the Earth.
My Father was the Sky.'

Myth and Memory in Maori Novels
in English

PETER LANG

Oxford · Bern · Berlin · Bruxelles · Frankfurt am Main · New York · Wien

Contents

| | |
|--|-----|
| Acknowledgements | vii |
| CHAPTER ONE | |
| He Kupu Whakataki : Introduction | 1 |
| 1.1 Maori Writing in Contemporary Discourse | 7 |
| CHAPTER TWO | |
| Myth and Memory: Functions and Methods | 13 |
| 2.1 Myth and the Emergence of Maori Identity | 13 |
| 2.2 Old Tales for a New Future: The Use of Myth in Maori Fiction | 42 |
| 2.3 Memory in Narrative: In Search of a Maori Identity | 85 |
| CHAPTER THREE | |
| He Tubinga Pakimaero : The Novels | 111 |
| 3.1 Te Tumu : The Foundations – What It Means To Be Maori | 113 |
| 3.2 Te Poupou : The Walls – Occupying the New Maori Space | 157 |
| 3.3 Te Tabu : The Roof – Moving Towards Home | 201 |
| CHAPTER FOUR | |
| He Kupu Whakatepe : Conclusion | 247 |
| 4.1 The Novel as Re-Interpreter of the Past and Guide to the Future | 248 |
| 4.2 From a Literature of Survival to Novels of Empowerment and Pioneering | 252 |
| Bibliography | 259 |
| Index | 277 |