

The Holocaust
and the Postmodern

ROBERT EAGLESTONE

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Abbreviations ix

Introduction 1

I. READING AND THE HOLOCAUST

1. 'Not Read and Consumed in the Same Way as Other Books':
Identification and the Genre of Testimony 15
2. Traces of Experience: The Texts of Testimony 42
3. 'Faithful and Doubtful, Near and Far': Memory, Postmemory, and Identity 72
4. Holocaust Reading: Memory and Identification in Holocaust
Fiction, 1990–2003 101

II. HOLOCAUST METAHISTORIES

5. Against Historicism: History, Memory, and Truth 137
6. 'Are Footnotes Less Barbaric?': History, Memory, and the Truth of the Holocaust in the Work of Saul Friedländer 173
7. 'What Constitutes a Historical Explanation?': Metahistory and the Limits of Historical Explanation in the Goldhagen/Browning Controversy 194
8. The Metahistory of Denial: The Irving/Lipstadt Libel Case and Holocaust Denial 224

III. THE TRACE OF THE HOLOCAUST

9	Inexhaustible Meaning, Inextinguishable Voices: Levinas and the Holocaust	249
10	Cinders of Philosophy, Philosophy of Cinders: Derrida and the Trace of the Holocaust	279
11	The Limits of Understanding: Perpetrator Philosophy and Philosophical Histories	300
12	The Postmodern, the Holocaust, and the Limits of the Human	317
	Conclusion	339
	Select Bibliography	347
	Index	365