

RONALD E. FRANK

The Wharton School
University of Pennsylvania

WILLIAM F. MASSY

Graduate School of Business
Stanford University

YORAM WIND

The Wharton School
University of Pennsylvania

PREFACE

xi

PART 1

Introduction

CHAPTER 1 Market Segmentation: The Issues

Strategies for Market Segmentation (|
Market Segmentation Research
The Special Role of Descriptor Variables
Plan of the Book

PART 2

Segmentation Studies: Findings and Implications

CHAPTER 2 General Customer Characteristics

25

Introduction
Demographic Characteristics
Socioeconomic Characteristics
Personality and Life Style Characteristics ^
• Conclusions

CHAPTER 3	Situation Specific Customer Characteristics	66
	Purchase and Loyalty Patterns
	Participation in the Adoption and Diffusion Process
	Attitudes, Intentions, Perceptions, and Preferences
	Conclusions
CHAPTER 4	Organizational and Country Characteristics	90
	Organizational Characteristics
	Country Characteristics
	Conclusions
PART 3
Methodology of Segmentation Research
CHAPTER 5	Central Issues in the Design of Segmentation Studies	115
	The Two Approaches
	Cross-Sectional Designs
	Hybrid Designs
	Conclusions
CHAPTER 6	The Anatomy of Segmentation Research	137
	Simple to Complex Designs
	Conclusions
PART 4
Normative Segmentation Theory
CHAPTER 7	Segmentation Theory Based on Microeconomic Concepts	173
	Some Fundamental Theoretical Issues
	Contributions of Price Theory to Market Segmentation
	Price Theory Extended to Include Promotion
	Segmentation Models with Real-World Constraints
	The Determination of Segments

- Sources of Uncertainty
- The Effects of Response Uncertainty
- Uncertainty about Media Coverage
- A Hierarchy of Opportunity Losses

PART 5

Conclusions

- Executive Behavior
- Consumer Behavior