

Postcolonial Studies and the Literary

Theory, Interpretation and the Novel

Eli Park Sorensen

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction	x
Parti
1 The Melancholia of Postcolonial Studies	3
Literary form and postcolonial studies	3
The modernist ethos	8
The postcolonial perspective	12
Melancholic self-reflections	16
Postcolonial studies and literature	18
The melancholia of postcolonial studies	22
2 Returning to the Literary	26
Can the literary speak?	26
Literature at the threshold	31
Literary otherness	33
The politics of form	35
The monopolisation of the literary	38
Realism as straw man	41
Critical fictions	46
3 Utopian-Interpretive Trajectories	52
Utopian trajectories	52
The secret of the form	55
Lukacs's theory of the novel I: The Theory of the Novel	58
Lukacs's theory of the novel II: realism	66
History, postcoloniality and literary form	71
Part II
4 Form and Temporality in Ousmane Sembene's Xala	75
The problematic of imitativeness	75
Intermediary dreams	77
Incomplete fusions	80
History as still life	84
The return of the repressed	90
Negative realism	94

5 Arcades of Foreignness: J. M. Coetzee's Foe	96
Writing back to the centre and the question of canonicity	96
Literalness and irony	99
Narrative silences and mysteries	100
Authorial struggles	102
Cannibalism and otherness	104
Thresholds of translation	106
Arcades of foreignness	109
Worldliness, criticism and literature	110
The beginning is a ruin	116
6 Realism in Rohinton Mistry's 4 Fine Balance	121
Lukacsian overtures	121
Accidents and history	123
Superfluity, interpretation, causes	126
Antibodies and blood	129
Games and laws	131
Stitching, narrating, describing	134
Conclusion: Realism, Form and Balance	138
Notes	143
Works Cited	173
Index	184