Introduction	9

Part I PREMISES

Chapter 1. The Education Context.....	17
1.1. Why and who	18
1.2. What and when	21
1.3. How and where	24
Chapter 2. How Cognitive Neuroscience Can Inform Education Policies and Practices	27
2.1. What cognitive neuroscience can tell... ..	27
2.2. ... the education policies	30

Part II COGNITIVE NEUROSCIENCE MEETS EDUCATION

Chapter 3. The Three Fora	35
3.1. Brain mechanisms and early learning: the New York forum	35
3.2. Brain mechanisms and youth learning: the Granada forum	37
3.3. Brain mechanisms and learning in ageing: the Tokyo forum	40
Chapter 4. Learning Seen from a Neuroscientific Approach.....	43
4.1. Principles of brain organisation and neural information processing	43
4.1.1. Neurons, mental states, knowledge and learning	43
4.1.2. Functional organisation	44
4.2. Research tools, methodologies and educational implications: the impact of brain imaging	46
4.3. Literacy and numeracy	50
4.3.1. Language learning	50
4.3.2. Reading skills	52
4.3.3. Mathematical skills	54

4.4. Emotions and learning	55
4.4.1. The emotional brain	55
4.4.2. Emotional regulation and imagery	58
4.4.3. Effortful control: an educational-variable	59
4.5. The lifelong learning brain	60
4.5.1. Ageing and illness: Alzheimer's disease and senile depression	62
4.5.2. Fitness and cognitive vitality	66
4.5.3. Plasticity and lifelong learning	67
4.6. Neuromythologies	69
4.6.1. Separating science from speculation	69
4.6.2. Hemisphere dominance or specialisation	72
4.6.3. Synaptic development, "enriched" environments and "critical" periods ..	73
 Part III CONCLUSION
Chapter 5. The Way Ahead	81
5.1. Towards a new learning science based on a trans-disciplinary approach?	81
5.2. The next steps: research networks	87
5.2.1. Research types and methodology	87
5.2.2. Three research areas	87
5.2.3. Three research networks: structure and expected outcomes	89
Annex: Agendas of the Three Fora	93
