

Robert Chia

Organizational Analysis as Deconstructive Practice

W
DE
G

Walter de Gruyter • Berlin • New York 1996

Table of Contents

Introduction: Upstream and Downstream Thinking.....1

Downstream Thinking and Organizational Analysis.....2

The Critique of Downstream Thinking.....8

Upstream Thinking.....11

Constructionism/Pragmatism and Upstream Thinking.....14

Organizational Analysis as Deconstructive Practice.....17

Part 1: The Organization of Theory , ;

Chapter 1: Ontological Realism and The Ideology of Representation.....25

Introduction...!!.....25

The Status of Science.....26

Being-Realism . . . :.....31

The Fallacy of Misplaced Concreteness . . . :.....33

Representing and the Ideology of Representation.....35

The Ideology of Representation.....38

The Organization of Classical Knowledge.....39

Conclusion.....43

Chapter 2: Epistemological Realism and Organization Theory.....45

Introduction.....45

Scientific Realism.....45

The Organization of Science: Positivistic Knowledge.....47

The Organization of Science: Realist Knowledge.....50

Varieties of Realism.....52

Ontological and Epistemological Commitments of Realism.....55

Epistemological Realism in the Social Sciences.....56

The Science of Organization.....58

Conclusion.....65

Chapter 3: The Problem of Reflexivity in Organizational Analysis.....	67
Introduction.....	67
The Reflexive Problem of Representationalist Epistemology.....	70
'Methodological Horrors' in Representationalist Theorizing.....	73
Paradox-Deferring Strategies in Organizational Analysis.....	74
Reflexivity: The Postmodern Predicament... ¹	79
Reflexive Theorizing in Organization Studies.....	82
Meta-Reflexivity in Organizational Analysis.....	83
Responses to the Problem of Reflexivity in Organization Studies.....	86
Avoiding the Reflexivity Cul-de-Sac.....	90
Conclusion.....	93
 Part 2: Upstream Thinking and Postmodern Organizational Analysis
 Chapter 4: Reconfiguring Truth, Reality, Representation and Organization.....	97
Introduction.....	97
Postmodernism.....	98
Discontinuities and Fragmentation.....	103
Postmodern Sensibilities.....	105
Postmodern Pragmatism: Reconceptualising Knowledge and Truth.....	110
Postmodern Priorities.....	115
Towards a 'Weak' Thinking Style in Organizational Analysis.....	117
Conclusion.....	118
 Chapter 5: Organization as Representation: Power, Economy and Remote Control.....	121
Introduction.....	121
The Structure of Representation.....	122
Explaining Explanations.....	124
Technologies of Representation.....	129
The Space of Representation.....	137
Organization as Representation.....	143
Conclusion.....	146

Chapter 6: Thinking Proeessually: From 'Organizations' to Organizing Processes.....149

Introduction.....149

The 'Will' in Organization and Representation.....150

Dismantling 'Organizations'.....152

From 'Organizations' to Organizing Processes.....155

Thinking Proeessually: Actor-Networks, Autopoiesis and Distributed Cognition.....161

Thinking Proeessually: The Linguistic Organization of Reality.....167

Conclusion.....172

Part 3: Organizational Analysis as Deconstructive Practice

Chapter 7: Logocentrism and Deconstruction.....175

Introduction.....175

Language, Writing and the Organization of Society.....177

Derrida and the Logic of Writing.....182

Deconstruction.....186

Conclusion.....192

Chapter 8: Organizational Analysis as Deconstructive Practice.....193

Introduction.....193

The Case of'Decision' in Organization Theory.....193

Deconstructing Decision-Making.....195

Rethinking the Concept of Decision.....204

After Deconstruction: Subtle Knowing and Supple Minds.....209

Implications: Deconstructive Analysis and the Educational Process.....211

Conclusion.....215

Conclusions.....217

References.....221

Index.....237