

THE YOUNG KARL MARX

German philosophy, modern politics, and human flourishing

DAVID LEOPOLD

Mansfield College, Oxford

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Acknowledgements	page xi
A note on language, references, and translation	xiii
1 Introduction	i
The 'discovery' of the early writings	i
Their contested status	5
Additional obstacles	8
Human nature and the modern state	10
Doubts and ambitions	12
Organisation and argument	15
2 German philosophy	17
The 1843 Kritik	19
Traumgeschichte and modernity	22
Heine (and Paris)	26
Traumgeschichte and Hegel's Rechtsphilosophie	32
Hegel's metaphysics	34
What is dead: Marx's critical response	47
What Hegel's insight is not	56
The lineaments of the modern social world	62
What is living: Hegel's empirical insight	69
The failure of Hegelian mediation	74
The continuing relevance of the Kritik	82
A (brief) digest	96
3 Modern politics	100
Introduction' to Bauer	101
Bauer and Judaism	109
Bauer and real freedom	115
Bauer and emancipation	120
Reconstructing Bauer's concerns	129
The preconditions of the modern state	134
Christianity and the modern state: the positive analogy	139

Christianity and the modern state: the negative analogy	145
Marx and lights	150
Andsemitism and Jewish self-hatred	• 163
A (brief) digest	• 180
4 Human flourishing , .	183
The structure of human emancipation	184
Feuerbach's critique of religion and philosophy	186
Feuerbach and politics	203
Feuerbach and Marx	218
'-Marx and human nature'	223
A zbon politikon	234
Human nourishing	• 241
Institutional fragments	245
The end of politics	254
Marx and Rousseau	262
Marx and Saint-Simon	271
A (brief) digest	, 277
5 Epilogue	279
Definitional preliminaries	280
Marx's (qualified) approval of utopianism	282
Marx's (qualified) disapproval of utopianism	288
The necessity of blueprints	293
A last word	295
Bibliographical note	298
Index	310