

Rewriting Gender
Reading contemporary Chinese women

RAVNI THAKUR

Zed Books

LONDON AND NEW JERSEY

Contents

Acknowledgements .	VII
Introduction	i
PART I
Orthodox Gender Discourse and the Literary Field	7
i Gender relations and literature: an inter-disciplinary approach	9
The landscape: feminist theories of literature /9
The concept of discourse: a Foucaultian approach /14
Differentiating between discourses /21 Bourdieu and the literary field /22 Discourses of power and discourses of resistance: the agent's space /25 Conclusion /30
2 One step forward, two steps back: the construction of an orthodox discourse on gender	34
Early orthodox discourse: the construction of a habitus of gender relations /•$$ Repudiating tradition: the emergence of the women's question /38 The Communist Party and the women's question, 1921-49 /41 Institutionalising a new orthodoxy: women in post-revolutionary China /47
The Great Leap Forward: women as labour heroines /50
The Cultural Revolution, 1966-76 /$2 Re-emphasising femininity and motherhood: the post-Mao years /53
Conclusion /60
3 The literary field and women writers	68
The fundamental principles of literary criticism in China /70
The organisation of the literary field /74 Literature in the post-Mao Era 1976-88: struggle with orthodoxy /83
Niixing Wenxue or the discourse on women's writing /86
Conclusion /103

PART II

Responses to Gender Discourse	109
4 A methodology for character analysis	111
What is a character? /111
Reconstructing the character /115
The function of the author /117
5 Orthodox responses to gender discourse	120
A traditional gender identity paradigm: Ouyang Duanli in Lapse of Time /121
A socialist gender identity paradigm: Lu Wenting in At Middle Age /135
Critical praise and ideality /145
6 Heterodox responses to gender discourse	151
Zhang Xinxin's On the Same Horizon (Zai Tongyi de pingxiangshang) /152
Zhang Jie's The Ark /163
Critical discourse /177
Conclusion /183
7 Cultural specificity and comparative theory	185
Discourse, gender and the literary field /185
Orthodox gender discourse in China /189
The literary field in China /191
'Women's Literature' and the deployment of Gender Discourse /192
Agency and gender identity paradigms /193
Orthodoxy and heterodoxy: participatory positions by women writers /194
Cultural specificity and theory as the outsider /197
Bibliography	200
Index	218