

DAVID MARSH

TI

The Bank that Rules Europe

Heinemann -London

Contents

Preface	1
Glossary	5
1. The Hub of Europe I ¹	8
i. Wider than the Reich	10
ii. Ensconed on the throne	14 -
iii. 'We are arrogant because we are good'	16
iv. A product of history	18
v. The end of the cadres	22
vi. Pragmatism and survival	23
2. Safeguarding the Currency	28
i. A fixed point in the ocean	29
ii. Metamorphosis in Berlin	32
iii. Breaking free	35
iv. A sense of detachment	41
v. A stable tradition	44
vi. 'An asset more important than gold'	47
vii. 'Experience has shown that we were right'	50
viii. Adjusting to circumstances,	53
3. Inside the Bundesbank	57
i. The Gobelins are gone	58
ii. The room at the top	61
iii. 'When we toss in a stone ...'	65
iv. Defiance at court	71
v. Persuading the president's men	74
vi. 'He was incapable of diplomacy'	77
vii. Layers of responsibility	79
viii. Dealing in D-Marks	82
ix. Burning money	85
x. Over-rated and under-paid?	86

4.	Partner in Catastrophe	91
i.	At the hub of the Reich	92
ii.	Misplaced trust	95
iii.	The crumbling of the Mark	98
iv.	Ambition and ambivalence	101
v.	'The national windstorm will not die down'	107
vi.	'This government will avoid monetary experiments'	110
vii.	A role in repression	113
viii.	Reaching the limits	117
5.	The March of the Reichsmark	122
i.	'A very weak human being'	123
ii.	A bank with National Socialist character	128
iii.	The plan for European Economic Union	132
iv.	Persistent pursuit of orthodoxy	135
v.	'German order is being destroyed'	138
vi.	The magician's fate	139
6.	Continuity and Change	142
i.	A hybrid takes shape	143
ii.	A tussle between Allies	146
iii.	'The Yanks nearly passed out'	150
iv.	A certain flexibility	154
v.	The return of the old guard	159
vi.	'Not the slightest guilt falls on the Bank ...'	161
vii.	The battle for independence	164
7.	A Question of Interest	168
i.	'The central bank can topple the government...'	169
ii.	Discord and harmony	172
iii.	Setting a standard	177
iv.	Discovery of a dilemma	180
v.	Consequences of a conversion	184
vi.	The end of Bretton Woods	189
vii.	Searching for a system	193
8.	The Challenge of Unity	196
i.	An enterprise of epic proportions	197
ii.	A meek counterweight to authority	203
iii.	'The idea of monetary union is unrealistic'	206
iv.	The chancellor changes his mind	210
v.	The conversion takes shape	213
vi.	Strains in the council	217
vii.	Disaster in Brussels	221
viii.	A mind made up	223
ix.	The aftermath of unity	225

9.	The Quest for Europe's Money	228
	i. At the crossroads of Europe	231
	ii. A lopsided agreement	237
	iii. 'Such a lovely couple'	242
	iv. 'Nothing will come of Emu'	245
	v. Fighting for the D-Mark	247
	vi. Residual conditions	252
	vii. Fears and die future	253
10.	Skirmishes Ahead	256
	i. A delicate balance	257
	ii. The German path	261
	iii. Towards Bundesbank rule?	263
	Notes	267
	Appendix	338
	Bibliography	347
	Index	350