

Fuel for Change: World Bank energy policy - rhetoric and reality

edited by Ian Tellam

Zed Books
LONDON•NEW YORK

Both ENDS
AMSTERDAM

Contents

Acknowledgements /viii

About the Contributing Organizations /ix

Abbreviations and Acronyms /xiv

I	The Burning Issues	1
1	Fuelling Change	3
	Introduction /$ Biomass for survival in Africa /j Diverse energy resources in Asia /-j Energy inefficiency in Central and Eastern Europe /8 Increasing urbanization in Latin America /i 1 A world of difference /14
2	The World Bank and Energy	18
	The shift in the Bank's energy policies /18 The policies are controversial /20 No shift towards sustainable energy /32 The Bank versus civil society /•$(>
II	World Bank Energy Policy in Practice: Country Studies	51
3	Cameroon	53
	Energy and economic crisis /53 Song Loulou hydroelectric plant /55 The Mape dam /$6 No effective framework for sustainable energy /K,6
4	Kenya	59
	A deteriorating situation /5a, The Energy Sector Reform and Power Development Project /6$ Gaps between policy and practice /6$
5	Zimbabwe	68
	Energy and development in Zimbabwe /68 A considerable energy endowment /69 Alternatives to environmental damage /70 The Bank's weak link to environmental issues /-JT.

Fuel for Change	vi
6 China	81
Opportunities for China's power sector /81
Social and environmental challenges /83
Sustainable energy options /85
7 India	87
The Indian power sector in crisis /87
The first and one of the largest borrowers /89
Recent World Bank projects /0.2
The Asian Development Bank in India /0.3
The 'energy shortage psychosis' /0.4
8 Indonesia	97
Indonesia's power sector /qi
Time to restructure? /go,
Besai hydropower plant /101
Environmental degradation and room for improvement /102
9 The Philippines	105
Energy in the Philippines /105
The importance of the banks /107
The Quezon power plant /107
Changes afoot? /i 12
10 Bulgaria	115
Energy shortages and high import bills /i 15
The World Bank's 'Energy I' project /116
Price reform is the stumbling-block /119
11 Hungary	121
A high degree of uncertainty /121
Sustainable energy left on the shelf /123
The World Bank's key role /125
12 Lithuania	127
Import dependence /127
The Bank's focus on energy supply /129
Accelerating towards the market /131
13 Ukraine	133
The highest energy intensity in the world /133
Sustainable options not fully considered /134
Electricity Market Rehabilitation Project /135
Heat Supply and Energy Efficiency Project /136
14 Brazil	140
Energy in transition /140
A chance for sustainable energy? /143
The banks and market restructuring /145
15 Colombia	149
-
Institutions in reform /149
Lack of effort for the support of sustainable energy /153
The banks' shift to the private sector /157
16 Mexico	159
Energy sources /159
New regulatory frameworks /160
Enterprise and market restructuring /162
Lack of finance for sustainable energy /163	Bank failure on social and environmental commitments /167

17	Uruguay	170
	The institutions /170
	Energy sources/171
	Market deregulation, regional integration /171
	Lack of official concern for sustainable energy/173
	Scope for improvement?/175
	Bank focus on expansion /177
III	Energy Policy for the Future	181
18	Which Way Forward?	183
	The rhetoric of the World Bank's sustainable energy principles /185
	The reality of the World Bank's energy investments /186
	Fuel for change /188
	Appendix: The Multilateral Development Banks and Energy	191
	Select Bibliography	201
	Index	202
	 Boxes
2.1	Local communities fight for public power in the USA /24
2.2	Controversy surrounds UK energy privatization /25
2.3	Integrated resource planning and demand-side management /z
2.4	The Climate Convention and Kyoto Protocol /44
	 Tables
2.1	World Bank lending for the energy sector, 1980—97 /34
2.2	Top ten countries attracting private participation in electricity, 1990-97 /3s	