

CAN THE MORAL HAZARD CAUSED BY IMF BAILOUTS BE REDUCED?

Geneva Reports on the World Economy Special Report I

Barry Eichengreen

• University of California, Berkeley, and CEPR

ICMB INTERNATIONAL CENTER
FOR MONETARY
AND BANKING STUDIES

CIMB CENTRE INTERNATIONAL
D'ETUDES MONETAIRES
ET BANCAIRES

Contents

Author Acknowledgements	ix
Foreword	xi
Preface	xiii
Executive Summary	xv
1 Introduction	1
1.1 Two causes of crises and two solutions	2
2 Investor Panic	6
2.1 Why panics occur	6
2.2 Korea: the canonical case	6
2.3 Limitations of existing responses to the panic problem	7
3 Problems with Fundamentals Implying a Need to Restructure	13
3.1 Korea: an alternative interpretation	13
3.2 Limitations of existing responses to the restructuring problem	13
4 Problems with Existing Approaches to Reducing Moral Hazard	15
4.1 New rules for IMF lending	16
4.2 The ad hoc approach	17
5 Officially Sanctioned Standstills as a Solution to the Panic Problem	19
5.1 Implementation	21
5.2 Objections	23
5.3 Impact on borrowing costs	25
5.4 Implications	31
6 Collective Action Clauses as a Solution to the Restructuring Problem	33
6.1 Rationales	33
6.2 Objections	35
6.3 Impact on borrowing costs	36
6.4 Implications	38
7 Recommendations	40
Appendix: Other Initiatives	43
A.1 UDROPs	44
A.2 Creditor committees*	45
A.3 Mediation	47
References	49