

Transitions in Secondary Education in Sub-Saharan Africa

Equity and Efficiency Issues

Secondary Education in Africa (SEIA)

Africa Region Human Development Department

THE WORLD BANK
Washington, D.C.

Contents

Foreword	v
Acknowledgments	vii
Acronyms and Abbreviations	ix
Executive Summary	xi
Resume analytique	xxi
1 Introduction	1
• Background to and Rationale for the SEIA-TRANSE Study	1
Overview of the Problem	2
Definition of "Transitions"	7
Effects on Transitions: Critical Factors	9
Measures to Improve Transitions	12
• Methodology	14
The Challenges, Strengths, and Limitations of the Study	18
2 An Overview of the Promising Practices Selected for the Study	19
Namibia	19
Eritrea	25
Senegal	27
Mali	30
Tanzania	32
South Africa	35
3 Analyses of the Promising Practices	39
Key Perspectives	40
4 Conclusions and Recommendations	47
Differentiation of Policies	48
Holistic Approaches	49
Multi-level Approaches	49
Sustainability	50
Monitoring and Evaluation	50
References	51

LIST OF TABLES

1. Educational Indicators Comparing Sub-Saharan Africa and All Developing Countries	3
2. African Countries Classified by Level of Enrollment in Secondary Education, 1996	4
3. Gross Enrollment Ratio in Secondary Education, 1990-2000	4
4. Enrollment Rate by Gender, 1990-2000	6

LIST OF FIGURES

1. Gross Enrollment Rates of Males and Females in Secondary Education in Five Different Countries	6
2. Model of Transitions between School Levels	8