

Economic Reform in Japan

Can the Japanese Change?

Edited by

Craig Freedman

*Director, Centre for Japanese Economic Studies
Macquarie University, Australia*

IN ASSOCIATION WITH THE CENTRE FOR JAPANESE
ECONOMIC STUDIES, MACQUARIE UNIVERSITY,
AUSTRALIA

Edward Elgar

Cheltenham, UK • Northampton, MA, USA

O

Contents

List of figures and tables	vii
List of contributors	viii
Learning to live on a horizontal learning curve	• x
1. When change is not reform: transforming the Japanese economy Craig Freedman	1
PART I NECESSARY CHANGE OR SHAMELESS SURRENDER? ECONOMIC REFORM IN JAPAN
2. Japan's new dawn approaches Mikio Wakatsuki	23
3. Reform? The dubious benefits of marketisation Ronald Dore	35
Comment on 'Reform? The dubious benefits of marketisation' Aiko Ikee	48
PART II THE FINE ART OF FINANCIAL INCOMPETENCE
4. The financial system of post-1945 Japan: its formation, development and deterioration Kazuhito Ikee	55
Comment on 'The financial system of post-1945 Japan: its formation, development and deterioration' Eileen Mauskopf	90
5. Japan's continuing financial difficulties and confused economic policies Makoto Itoh	98
Comment on 'Japan's continuing financial difficulties and confused economic policies' Masato Masuda	129

PART III JAPANESE FIRMS: HAPPY FAMILIES OR ANONYMOUS CORPORATE STRUCTURES?

6. Can the Japanese change? Organizational, psychological and evolutionary perspectives 139
Koichi Hamada
- Comment on 'Can the Japanese change? Organizational, psychological and evolutionary perspectives' 158
Noel Gas ton
7. Japan's industries and companies: economic dynamism and social continuity 167
James C. Abegglen

PART IV PRODUCING A MORE JAPAN-FRIENDLY WORLD

8. Japan and the international economic institutions 191
Marcus No/and
- Comment on 'Japan and the international economic institutions' 216
Colin McKenzie
- Index* 223