

ing
Economic Theory

The Problem of Human Agency

Allen Oakley

The University of Newcastle, Australia

Edward Elgar

Cheltenham, UK ° Northampton, MA, USA

Contents

Preface	ix
1 Introduction	1
1.1 Direction and scope	1
1.2 Realism and human inquiry	6
1.3 Principles of folk psychology	8
1.4 The existential nature of situated human agency	12
1.5 Representing human agency in mainstream economic theory	19
1.6 A look ahead	28
2 Alfred Schutz: individuals as human agents	32
2.1 Introduction	32
2.2 Schutz and economics	36
2.3 The structure of Schutz's human inquiry	40
2.4 Individual agents as isolated human beings	43
3 Schutz and socially situated agents	54
3.1 Introduction	54
3.2 Social agents and their intersubjective relationships	54
3.3 Social agents and the structured life-world	65
3.4 Conclusion: Schutz's legacy and its lacunae	71
4 Karl Popper's ontology of situated human agency	75
4.1 Introduction	75
4.2 Situational analysis in economic science	81
4.3 Mind and individual self-identity	84
4.4 The three-worlds representation of the human situation	87
4.5 Reason and circumstances	92
4.6 An ontology of human situations	95
4.7 Concluding critique	98
5 George Shackle and the temporal conditioning of human agency	105
5.1 Introduction	105
5.2 Human agency in economics	109
5.3 Circumstances and knowledge	115
5.4 Expectations	121

6	Shackle's theory of choice and action under uncertainty	125
6.1	Introduction	125
6.2	The nature of choice	125
6.3	Choice and action	130
7	Shackle and the situational conditioning of choice and action	146
7.1	Introduction	146
7.2	Situational conditioning	147
7.3	Concluding critique	154
8	Herbert Simon and the limits of agent rationality	161
8.1	Introduction	161
8.2	Problems with rationality in economics	165
8.3	Reason and the realities of agents' actions	169
8.4	Bounded rationality in operation	174
8.5	Organizational action in economics	178
8.6	Assessing Simon's contributions	185
9	Human agency, situational analysis and the reconstruction of economic theory	191
9.1	Introduction	191
9.2	Agents as existential individuals in the real world	193
9.3	Situational structures and conditioning	197
9.4	An extension of situational analysis	201
9.5	The contingent remainder	208
9.6	Methodology and situational analysis	210
	Bibliography	218
	Index	229