

The Future of Economic Growth

As New Becomes Old

Robert Boyer

Senior Researcher at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (CNRS), Professor (Directeur d' Etudes) at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales (EHESS) and Economist at the Centre d'Etudes Prospectives d'Economie Mathematique Appliquees a la Planification (CEPREMAP), Paris, France

THE SAINT-GOBAIN CENTRE FOR ECONOMIC STUDIES SERIES

Edward Elgar

Cheltenham, UK • Northampton, MA, USA *

Contents

List of Figures	v	i	i	i
List of Graphs and Boxes				ix
List of Tables				x
Preface to the English edition				xi
Acknowledgements				xvii
Introduction				1
A shared vision				1
Beyond the myths				2
A kaleidoscopic approach				3
1 A social construct and an analytical challenge				5
Introduction				5
The American economy in the 1990s was no longer the same as that in the 1960s				5
Combining micro- and macroeconomics, history and geography				8
The difficulty of analysing structural changes in real time				9
Conclusion				13
2 Microeconomic instability and an uncertain organizational model				14
Introduction				14
Digitalized information and redundant networks				14
The three figures of the 'new economy'				17
The search for an organizational model for the 'new economy'				19
Conclusion				25
3 A growth regime driven by information and communications technology?				26
Introduction				26
The new and the old economies: a conjunction of two virtuous circles?				26
The Solow paradox has not been entirely resolved yet				28
Faster potential growth: problems with forecasting				33
The 'new economy' has had different effects on different sectors				36
Conclusion				42

4	Genealogy of the 'new economy': the institutional change at the heart of the US trajectory	44
	Introduction	44
	1973-2000: the long search for successors to the Fordist growth regime	44
	An early deregulation of the product market	51
	Increasingly competitive labour markets	53
	ICT as a way of overcoming management problems in large companies	55
	The peace dividend	57
	A new architecture for economic policy	58
	Multiform financial innovations	60
	Internationalization underpinned internal US dynamics	62
	Should other countries adopt the institutional architecture of the USA?	63
	Conclusion	64
5	The geography of the 'new economy': the diversity of institutional architectures	65
	Introduction	65
	ICT at the heart of the technological change process	65
	Pre-conditions for virtuous growth: two configurations	68
	Was the US configuration exemplary or just singular?	70
	Three institutional configurations	71
	Is it necessary to produce ICT in order to know how to use them?	73
	Conclusion	75
6	2000-2002: reassessing the potential of ICT-driven growth	77
	Introduction	77
	The Internet bubble: from boom to burst	77
	Traders and economists forget the lessons of history at their own peril	86
	Consecutive technological paradigms do not resemble one another	90
	Conclusion	99
7	The long-term historical outlook after the Internet bubble	101
	Introduction	101
	Overestimating ICT's role	101
	The end of three major myths	105
	Inequalities within and between countries: down with technological determinism	107
	An uncertain mode of regulation	109

The opposition between the old and the new economy is obsolete	115
Conclusion	118
8 The emergence of an anthropogenetic model	120
Introduction	120
ICT as the vector of real-time management?	120
Moving towards a network economy?	124
The transition towards a knowledge economy?	128
In the long run: an anthropogenetic model	136
Conclusion	143
9 Conclusion	145
The future lasts for a long time	145
Behind the success of the 'new economy': a crisis already in the making	145
Multiform institutional changes rather than technological determinism	147
The geography of the 'new economy' actually includes the Nordic countries	147
ICT is already a mature industry	148
The power of Wall Street instead of Silicon Valley	149
Altered competition but no return to mythical competitive markets	150
Between speculation and Utopia: the anthropogenetic model	151
Bibliography	153
Index	168