

The Transatlantic Collapse of Urban Renewal Postwar Urbanism from New York to Berlin

Christopher Klemek

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

Chicago and London

Contents

Acknowledgments / ix

Introduction: The Final Frontier /1

I. Interlocking Foundations of the Urban Renewal Order /17

1. Atlantic Crossings of the Urban Renewal Order: From Interwar Berlin, via Wartime London, to Postwar Toronto / 21
2. Assembling the Four Pillars: An Urban Renewal Order Takes Shape in the United States, 1934-65 /48

II. Converging Critiques of the Urban Renewal Order / 79

3. Aesthetic Critiques: The Urbanist Establishment Rediscovered the Old City /83
4. Policy Objections: Social Scientists Question the Urban Renewal Order /102
5. Outsider's Revolt: Jane Jacobs and Outright Rejection from beyond the Urbanist Establishment /109

III. The Transatlantic Collapse of the Urban Renewal Order /129

6. The First Wave of Resistance: Freeway Revolts /133
7. The Tide Shifts: Neighborhood Protectionism /143
8. A Bitter End? Self-Destruction by Democracy /161

IV. Aftermath(s): Ideological Polarization and Political Struggle after the Fall of the Urban Renewal Order /175

- g. New Left Urbanism vs. Neocon Urban Crisis: Divergent Intellectual Responses in the United States /179
10. The Anti-experts: Citizen Participation, Advocacy Planning, and the Urbanist Establishment /187

11. Nixon Urbanistes and "the Waterloo of Planning" / 202

12. Softer Landings after the Fall: Divergent Legacies of the Urban Renewal Order / 217

Conclusion: First We Take Manhattan, Then We Take Berlin / 239

Appendix / 249

Notes I 255

Index I 299