

The Political Economy of Transition

International trade, factor market imperfections, and structural adjustment

With a foreword
by Prof. Albert Schweinberger, Ph.D.

Contents

Introduction	1
1.1 Objective	2
1.2 Facets of transition	4
1.3 On the economics of transition	5
1.4 Structure	6
1 The economics of transition	9
2 Stylised facts	11
2.1 Legacies of central planning	11
2.1.1 General features of socialist economies	11
2.1.2 Foreign trade in socialist economies	17
2.1.3 The financial system in socialist economies	19
2.1.4 Reforming socialist economies	20
2.2 Transition policies and developments	21
2.2.1 Transition policies	22
2.2.2 Economic developments	26
3 Transition in Eastern Europe	35
3.1 Perspectives on transition	36
3.2 Dimensions of Transition	40
3.2.1 Macroeconomic Stabilisation	43
3.2.2 Privatisation	48
3.2.3 Liberalisation	54
3.2.4 Restructuring	58
3.3 Summing Up- What is "Transition"?	62
4 Economic theory and transition	65
4.1 Walrasian general equilibrium theory and beyond	66
4.2 Second-best analysis: the role of distortions	72
4.2.1 Basic assumptions	72
4.2.2 Implications for transition	74
4.3 Political economy: the role of distribution	75

4.3.1 Basic assumptions . . . . . 76
 4.3.2 Models of the political process. . . . . 78
 4.3.3 Implications for transition. . . . . 83
 4.4 Rents and distortions: a unified framework. . . . . 84

II Economic restructuring, international trade and factor markets 87

5 Labour re-allocation 89
 5.1 Structural change and factor re-allocation. . . . . 90
 5.2 Labour adjustment and structural change. . . . . 94
     5.2.1 Labour adjustment, unemployment and economic restructuring . . . 94
     5.2.2 Labour adjustment, unemployment and growth. . . . . 100
     5.2.3 State enterprises and economic restructuring. . . . . 104
     5.2.4 Political economy aspects of labour adjustment. . . . . 106
 5.3 Labour adjustment and the path of transition. . . . . 108
     5.3.1 The basic framework . . . . . 109
     5.3.2 Economic transition without governmental interference. . . . . 111
     5.3.3 Economic transition and political support . . . . . 112
     5.3.4 Transition policies and the speed of restructuring . . . . . 114
 5.4 International trade and labour adjustment . . . . . 120
     5.4.1 A stylised model of economic restructuring. . . . . 121
     5.4.2 Effects of trade policy . . . . . 126
     5.4.3 Second-best trade policy . . . . . 128
 5.5 The political economy of trade liberalisation . . . . . 129
     5.5.1 The political process in transition economies. . . . . 129
     5.5.2 Trade policy in a static setting . . . . . 131
     5.5.3 Trade policy in a dynamic setting . . . . . 133
     5.5.4 Endogenous trade policy and welfare . . . . . 135

6 Capital markets and transition 139
 6.1 Financial markets in transition economies . . . . . 140
     6.1.1 Functions and problems of financial markets. . . . . 140
     6.1.2 Reforms of the financial sector. . . . . 145
     6.1.3 Financial markets and restructuring. . . . . 151
 6.2 Capital markets and the transition process. . . . . 152
     6.2.1 Intersectoral capital mobility and price liberalisation. . . . . 153
     6.2.2 Capital accumulation and structural change. . . . . 154
     6.2.3 Credit availability and the collapse of Output. . . . . 157
     6.2.4 Risk diversification and structural change. . . . . 161
 6.3 Imperfect capital markets. . . . . 166
     6.3.1 Missing markets . . . . . 166

6.3.2	Credit rationing . . . . .	.172
6.4	Credit rationing and international trade. . . . .	.175
6.4.1	A stylised model of credit rationing. . . . .	.175
6.4.2	Credit rationing in general equilibrium. . . . .	.177
6.4.3	Gains from trade. . . . .	.179
6.4.4	Heterogeneous borrowers. . . . .	.181
6.5	Bad debts, bank lending and structural change. . . . .	.183
6.5.1	The model . . . . .	.184
6.5.2	Credit market equilibrium and the allocation of credit. . . . .	.188
6.5.3	Trade liberalisation and the allocation of credit. . . . .	.191
6.6	The political economy of financial market reform . . . . .	.193
7	Conclusions	197
	References	201