

Climate Change and the UN Security Council

Edited by

Shirley V. Scott

School of Humanities and Social Sciences, UNSW Canberra, Australia

Charlotte Ku

School of Law, Texas A&M University, USA

 Edward Elgar
PUBLISHING

Cheltenham, UK • Northampton, MA, USA

Contents

List of tables	vii
List of contributors	viii
Foreword Caitlin E. Werrell and Francesco Femia	xii
Acknowledgements	xiv
1 The UN Security Council and global action on climate change Shirley V. Scott and Charlotte Ku	1
2 Climate change as a ‘threat to international peace and security’ Christopher K. Penny	25
3 Climate change and economic measures: One assumption and one scenario too many? Francesco Sindico and Mallory Orme	47
4 The creation of a climate change court or tribunal Shirley V. Scott, Patrick J. Keenan and Charlotte Ku	66
5 ‘Climate migration’ and the Security Council Frédéric Mégret and Benoît Mayer	85
6 The United Nations Security Council’s legislative and enforcement powers and climate change Alan Boyle, Jacques Hartmann and Annalisa Savaresi	101
7 Mainstreaming climate change adaptation into peace missions Paul F. Diehl	131
8 The EU’s distinctive approach to climate security Shahrazad Far and Richard Youngs	147
9 The UN Security Council’s role in developing a responsibility to respond to the climate change challenge Charlotte Ku	162
10 Contested legitimacy: The UN Security Council and climate change Martin Binder and Monika Heupel	186
11 The attitude of the P5 towards a climate change role for the Council Shirley V. Scott	209

12	Conclusions: A climate change role for the Council? Charlotte Ku and Shirley V. Scott	229
	Postscript	244
	Index	245