

INTEGRATION AND THE REGIONS OF EUROPE: HOW THE RIGHT POLICIES CAN PREVENT POLARIZATION

Monitoring European Integration 10

Pontus Braunerhjelm

IUI and SNS, Stockholm

Riccardo Faini

Università degli Studi di Brescia, International Monetary Fund and CEPR

Victor Norman

Norwegian School of Economics and Business Administration, Bergen, and CEPR

Frances Ruane

Trinity College, University of Dublin

Paul Seabright

Churchill College, University of Cambridge and CEPR

---

Contents

1 Introduction	1
1.1 The question	1
1.2 Europe and the United States: an initial comparison	2
1.3 The changes facing Europe	9
1.4 The policy responses	13
1.5 The structure of this book	14
1.6 Our argument in brief	15
2 Forces shaping the new economic geography	17
2.1 Agglomeration and fragmentation	17
2.2 Why location matters	18
2.3 Factors inducing relocation	19
2.3.1 New market structures	20
2.3.2 Sharper division of labour	21
2.3.3 More mobile factors of production	22
2.3.4 European industrial agglomerations	23
2.4 Interaction of forces	26
2.4.1 Firm size, agglomeration and fragmentation	26
2.4.2 Agglomeration and comparative advantage	27
2.4.3 Factor mobility and geographic concentration	28
2.5 Three scenarios	29
3 The location decisions of firms	31
3.1 Introduction	31
3.2 The level of FDI and firm structure in Europe: some stylized facts	33
3.3 Empirical analysis: the determinants of firm location	39
3.4 Conclusions and implications	44
4 The mobility of labour	46
4.1 Introduction	46
4.2 The endangered bird: the European migrant	47
4.3 Why are European migration flows so small?	49
4.4 What are the implications of low labour mobility?	55
4.5 The outlook for labour mobility	57
5 The state and regional development	60
5.1 Economic policy and regional convergence	60
5.2 Expenditure on regional policy	63
5.2.1 EU regional policy	63
5.2.2 National regional policy	65
5.2.3 EU and national regional policies – who spends what?	66
5.2.4 Regional policy implementation – how is the money spent?	67

5.3	Italy: The Mezzogiorno	70
5.3.1	The evolution of policy since the 1950s	70
	Phase I: Regional infrastructure investment policies	70
	Phase II: Regional investment incentives	70
	Phase III: Public enterprise investments and wage-subsidy policies	71
	Phase IV: Promotion of SMEs	72
	Phase V: Income supports	73
	Phase VI: Dismantling regional policy	73
5.3.2	Why did the policies fail?	73
5.3.3	Future prospects	76
5.4	Ireland	77
5.4.1	Economic performance	77
5.4.2	Industrial and regional policy objectives	77
5.4.3	The policy approach	79
5.4.4	Policy instruments	80
	Fiscal incentives	80
	Financial incentives	81
	Balancing discretion and certainty	81
5.4.5	Have Irish policy objectives been met?	81
5.4.6	Policy evaluation	85
5.4.7	Future prospects	86
5.4	Ireland and Italy	88
6	The games governments play	91
6.1	Introduction	91
6.2	Competition between governments: general principles	92
6.3	Competition and tax harmonization: recent experience	94
6.4	Effective and ineffective policies: lessons for nations and regions	96
	Appendix	99
	Bibliography	105