

Constructivism in International Relations
The politics of reality

Maja Zehfuss

University of Warwick

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Acknowledgements	page xi
List of abbreviations	xiii
1 Introduction	1
Constructivism in International Relations	2
Three constructivisms	10
German military involvement abroad	23
Plan of the book	33
2 Identity change? Wendt's constructivism and German military involvement abroad	38
The identity move	39
Collective identity	56
Collective identity reconsidered	63
The identity of identity	84
3 Intersubjectivity and the normative: Kratochwil's constructivism and German military involvement abroad	94
The significance of the normative	95
Norms as the basis of intersubjectivity	118
The politics of intersubjectivity and the normative	135
4 Words and world: Onuf's constructivism and German military involvement abroad	151
Words making the world	153
The normative effects of speech acts	171
Speech acts: success and failure	178
The politics of words and worlds	186

Contents

5	The politics of 'reality': Derrida's subversions, constructivism and German military involvement abroad	196
	The impossibility of pure presence and the politics of the 'real'	197
	The 'reality' of international politics	207
	Everyday 'reality'	222
	'Reality' as raw material	236
	The politics of constructivism	245
6	The politics of constructivism	250
	Responsibility in international relations	254
	Constructivism, reality, International Relations	259
	Bibliography	264
	Index	281