INTRODUCTION	1
TILLING, SHOWING, SHOWING OFF	13
in which the threshold between two worlds is more telling than the division between the two sides of New York's Central Park, and words expose images exposing words
• Setting as Image, Nature as Sign • Who Is Speaking? a Asian Mammals: The Politics of Transition • The Contest between Time and Space: Evolution and Taxonomy • Circular Epistemology • In the Beginning Was the Word • Picking Up Crumbs • Notes •
THE VALUB FACTORY	57
in which issues of ownership and preservation reveal a first-person narrator, and literary theory is brought in to learn the foreign language spoken in museums; and in which the distinction between types of museums turns out to be more than just labeling
u The Medusa Effect • Discourses of Ownership and Conservation • For Goodness' Sake • Repetition and Metaphor • On Distinction • Difficulties of Looking and the Need to Read • Notes •

THE TALKING MUSEUM

87

in which one image reads another by hanging next to it, and in which parrots can speak without imitating; but this requires that discourse be liberated from the stronghold of linguistic supremacy

• Reading the Handwriting on the Wall • Museology versus Museums • Speaking Spaces: Reading Rooms • Word and Image Are But/Not One: Reading Walls • Reading Walls: Second Episode • Allegorical Museology • Notes •

MUSEUMTALK

in which conversations lead to monologues and authority makes sense, so that museology becomes a measure for cultural analysis

a The Discourse of Museum Discourse • Artspeak • Art Apart • Situatedness • Showing Your Hand • Notes •

FIRST PERSON. SECOND PERSON. SAME PERSON

165

in which the best scholarship gets entangled in a narrative of display in its very attempts to avoid such discourses, but where unknotting those knots turns out to be worthwhile

m Narrative under Suspicion • Telling Stories Is Harder Than You Think • The "New" Epistemology • Narrative and Epistemology • Second Person? • Notes •

A POSTCARD FROM THE ED6E

in which postcards, undeliverable for lack of a recent address, can still be returned to sender

m Playing Games • "Beauty" and the Critical Project • Showcase • The Subject of Eroticism a De-Distancing a Looking for Naughty Boys • Pimp versus Client • Return to Sender • Notes •

THE STORY OF W

in which lessons about reading metaphor against simplification are practiced to save Lucretia's (after)life, and the struggle to find words to fit images provides a model of integrative display

- The Practice of Theory - Rape, Suicide, Signs, and Show - Contagious Logorrhea: Between Men - Vision Vying Violence:
Between Women in Expository Writing - Notes -

HIS MASTER'S EYE

in which it turns out not all modern men heed Shakespeare's will, to the detriment of their own enjoyment; but some do, and thus teach cultural analysis about its subject

- A Vision That is Not (One) - Portrait of the Expert as an Old Man - Vision against Vision - The Interests of Realism - The Master's Piece - The Women Talk (Back) - Self-reflection: Exposing Modes of Vision - Notes -

HEAD HUNTING

in which "Judith" demonstrates that epistemology is not the prerogative of philosophers, and images will point out, for the last time, what can be shown, and what cannot

- The Missing Head - Epistemic Risks and Gentileschi - Vision and Narrative as Epistemologies - "Judith" as Epistemology, Gentileschi as Philosopher - Laying Bare - Notes -
