

Forerunners of Modern Financial Economics

A Random Walk in the History of Economic Thought

Donald R. Stabile

Edward Elgar

Cheltenham, UK • Northampton, MA, USA

Contents

Preface	vii
1. Introduction: finance, risk, and statistics	1
Modern financial economics	1
Investment risk	4
Risk, probability, and statistics	5
Bayesian approaches to finance	10
Overview of the book	12
Conclusion	13
2. The highs and lows of Bayesian economic statistics	15
Early probability theory: Pascal and Bayes	16
Science and statistics	22
Economics and Bayesian statistics	25
Bayesians and frequentist statistics	31
Economics and frequentist statistics	33
Conclusion	36
3. Irving Fisher and the mathematics of risk	38
Fisher's background	39
Fisher's value of capital under certainty	40
Fisher's value of capital under risk	44
Fisher, investment, and inflation	49
Conclusion	52
4. Thorstein Veblen and credit risk	53
Veblen's background	53
Veblen's behavioral economics	55
Veblen's followers: Mitchell and Davenport	60
Veblen and Fisher	66
Conclusion	68
5. Risk and diversification in the boom of the 1920s	69
Frank Knight: risk and uncertainty	71
Edgar Lawrence Smith and the case for common stocks	76

	Fisher faces the reality of risk	80
	Academic studies of the stock market	86
	Conclusion	89
6.	Evaluating market forecasts: financial economics in the 1930s	91
	Fisher discovers credit risk	92
	Cowles's analysis of stock market forecasting	95
	The random character of stock prices	102
	Econometrics	106
	Conclusion	107
7.	Statistics and the theory of value investing	108
	Graham and Dodd	108
	John Maynard Keynes	114
	John Burr Williams	122
	Conclusion	128
8.	Finance in a period of war, debt, and taxes	129
	Statistical studies	130
	Formula plans	133
	Common stock analysis	136
	The American Finance Association	140
	Conclusion	143
9.	The forerunners in relation to modern financial economics	145
	Frequentist methods of finance	147
	Bayesian statistics in economics and finance	152
	Behavioral finance	157
	Conclusion	158
	Bibliography	160
	Index	167