

Ralph C. Bryant

International
Coordination of National Stabilization
Policies

THE BROOKINGS INSTITUTION
Washington, D.C.

Contents

Preface	xiii
1. Introduction	1
2. Alternative Forms of Cooperation	6
Top-Level Cooperation: International Regime Environments	7
Lower-Level Cooperation: Mutual Recognition and Coordination	11
Rules and Discretion in National Macroeconomic Policies	16
Market Failures, Government Failures, and the Presumption for Subsidiarity	26
Alternative Analytical Perspectives	31
3. Coordination Analyzed through the Lenses of Policy Optimization	35
Basic Rationale for Coordination	35
Why May Coordination Occur?	37
How Large Are the Potential Gains?	40
4. Rule Analysis of International Regime Environments	46
Main Focus of Rule Analysis	46
Unresolved Analytical Issues	48
Stabilization Properties of Regimes	50
Emphasis on Exchange Rates?	52
5. Cooperation and Coordination as Regime Maintenance and Satisficing Stabilization	56

Management of Crisis Situations	57
The Unitary-Actor Assumption of Policy-Optimization Analysis	59
Other Criticisms Generated by Institutional Analysis	61
A Preliminary Assessment	63
6. Can Coordination Be Counterproductive?	65
Do Coordination Efforts Create Inappropriate Incentives?	65
Does Coordination Injure Third Parties?	69
Market Failures and Government Failures Once Again	71
7. The Implications of Uncertainty	74
Uncertainty about National Objectives and Intentions	74
Uncertainty about the Functioning of the World Economy	77
8. Cross-Border Spillovers: Major Features and Empirical Evidence	88
Major Features of Cross-Border Spillovers	88
Empirical Evidence on the Importance of Spillovers and Externalities	94
The Potential for Cooperation: An Illustrative Episode	96
9. Evolution of National Policies and International Institutions	102
Historical Experience	102
Generalizations from Historical Experience	106
Likely Evolution in the Short Run	111
Desirable Changes for the Medium Run: Enhanced Analytical Support	114
A Longer-Run Vision	120
10. Summary	126
Comments	130
Takatoshi Ito	130
Paul R. Masson	136
References	141
Index	157