

WBI LEARNING RESOURCES SERIES

Protecting the Global Environment

Initiatives by Japanese Business

Edited by
Wilfrido Cruz
Koichiro Fukui
Jeremy Warford

Contributors
Tomohiko Inui
Hiroyuki Kato
Noriyuki Kobayashi
Teruo Okazaki
Akie Takeuchi
Junichi Tsunoda

The World Bank
Washington, D.C.

Bibliothek Wasser und Umwelt
(TU Darmstadt)

61540393

Contents

Foreword v

Acknowledgments vii

Contributors ix

Part I. The Relevance of Japanese Global Environmental Initiatives to Developing Countries—An Overview

1. Global Benefits from Private Sector Initiatives:
Lessons on the Environment from Japan 3
Koichiro Fukui
2. Expanding the Scope and Constituency for Global Environmental Initiatives in Developing Countries 15
Wilfrido Cruz and Jeremy Warford
3. Review of Environmental Policy and Energy Conservation Policy in Japan 23
Tomohiko Inui and Hiroyuki Kato

Part II. Case Studies

4. Environmental Conservation by Japan's Iron and Steel Industry:
An Example of the Nippon Steel Corporation 49
Teruo Okazaki, Tomohiko Inui, and Akie Takeuchi
5. Environmental Conservation by Japan's Electric Power Industry:
An Example of the Electric Power Development Company 75
Junichi Tsunoda, Tomohiko Inui, and Akie Takeuchi
6. Reforestation of an Indonesian Tropical Forest:
The Win-Win Approach of a Private Japanese Firm 99
Noriyuki Kobayashi and Hiroyuki Kato