

A choice of futures

Fred Emery and Merrelyn Emery

Centre for Continuing Education, ANU, Canberra

Martinus Nijhoff Social Sciences Division
Leiden 1976

Contents

Preface . . . . .	v
-------------------	---

Part I

A model of man as communicator

Introduction . . . . .	1
1. Persuasion and communication . . . . .	3
2. Informational structure of the physical world . . . . .	5
3. Assumptions relating an individual to the informational structure of his environment . . . . .	16
4. Basic characteristics of interpersonal situations . . . . .	19
4.1. A question of notation . . . . .	19
4.2. General properties of the ABX model . . . . .	20
5. Awareness, images (symbolization) and psycho-logic . . . . .	27
5.1. Consciousness of thinking . . . . .	30
5.2. Information handling and the affect system . . . . .	31
5.3. Psycho-logics . . . . .	32
6. The extended social field and its informational structure . . . . .	33
6.1. The assumption of an extended social field . . . . .	33
6.2. Other social forms . . . . .	36
6.3. Extended social field as dilemma of man . . . . .	38

Part II*The modern media and man

7. Differences between the communication functions of the mass media, for individuals . . . . .	45
7.1. The functions of the different mass media . . . . .	45
7.2. Evidence of general differences between mass media . . . . .	51
7.3. Media and persuasion . . . . .	60
8. Television and maladaptation . . . . .	64
8.1. Introduction . . . . .	64
8.2. The most probable of the negative scenarios – a continuation of the present . . . . .	65
9. Television is a dissociative medium OR tele turns you off . . . . .	72
9.1. Vigilance and attention . . . . .	73
9.2. Visual stimuli and the left cortex . . . . .	75
9.3. Diencephalic and mesencephalic functions . . . . .	81
9.4. The characteristic mode of response to television . . . . .	82
9.5. Old brain function . . . . .	89
9.6. Black and white versus colour . . . . .	90
9.7. TV is inherently rewarding . . . . .	92
9.8. Effects on the motor system . . . . .	93
9.9. A note on motivation . . . . .	94
10. The long term consequences of regular viewing . . . . .	95
10.1. Dream deprivation and its effects . . . . .	95
10.2. Television and the young . . . . .	104
10.3. Some speculations back into reality . . . . .	106
10.4. Television and education . . . . .	107
11. Further notes on maladaptive strategies . . . . .	109
11.1. Organizational consequences of dissociation: laissez-faire . . . . .	109
11.2. Two other negative scenarios . . . . .	114
11.2.1. Segmentation . . . . .	114
11.2.2. Cycles of superficiality . . . . .	117

12. Taking stock of McLuhan . . . . .	122
12.1. The key McLuhan metaphors . . . . .	123
12.2. The missing link: the face and shame . . . . .	134
12.3. Summary . . . . .	143

Part III

Human communication and the adaptive response

Introduction . . . . .	145
13. Communication requirements in an adaptive society . . . . .	147
13.1. Social design theory . . . . .	147
13.2. Communication in a social system based on redundancy of its parts i.e. bureaucratically arranged . . . . .	150
13.3. Communication in a society based on the multifunctioning of its parts i.e. democratized . . . . .	161
14. Human communications in work . . . . .	166
14.1. The world of work . . . . .	166
14.2. Matrix organizations and organizational values . . . . .	171
15. Human communication and community life . . . . .	179
15.1. Revival of community life . . . . .	179
15.2. Development in rural communities . . . . .	183
16. Leisure: recreation or the pursuit of beauty? . . . . .	191
Epilogue . . . . .	200
Appendix A. War and the stability of Australia's future . . . . .	201
Appendix B. Computers and communication . . . . .	204
Appendix C. Computers, communications and containerization . . . . .	206
Bibliography . . . . .	208
Index . . . . .	213