1 Introduction	1
2 Walras's program and the neowalrasian diversion	15
2.1 Walras's program	15
2.1.1 Tatonnement in Walras's exchange models	18
2.1.2 Tatonnement in Walras's production models	22
2.2 The neowalrasians	25
3 How standard price theory became predominantly neowalrasian	33
3.1 Marshall, Walras, and the neowalrasians: some dividing lines	33
3.1.1 Markets and the definition of 'market' equilibrium	36
3.1.2 Adjustments to equilibrium	37
3.2 From a partial to a general equilibrium approach	40
3.2.1 From Marshall to Chamberlin	40
3.2.2 From Chamberlin to Walras	43
3.3 Equilibrium states and adjustment processes	46
4 On markets	52
4.1 Markets as institutional arrangements	53
4.1.1 Coase on markets	56
4.1.2 Set-up transaction costs and intermediation	58
4.1.3 Missing markets	59
4.2 Brokered and non-brokered markets: some general considerations	62
4.3 Decentralization of exchange: information and feasibility	67
4.3.1 The dimensions of the decentralization problem	67
4.3.1.1 Informational decentralization	67
4.3.1.2 The determination of transaction prices, and/or their communication to prospective transactors	68
4.3.1.3 Logistical decentralization	70
4.3.1.4 A typification of decentralization in models of exchange	70
4.3.2 The neowalrasian model of centralized exchange	72
4.3.3 Execution given convergence: two exercises at odds	74
4.3.3.1 The stability of tatonnement equilibrium	77
(i) Convergence	77
(ii) Beliefs	81
(iii) The consistency of bilateral barter with predetermined prices	82

(iv) Feasibility of trades	86
(v) Decentralized execution and sequential trading	88
(vi) Alternative attempts to formalize execution	95
4.3.4 The obstacles of the Walrasian program	99
4.3.4.1 Equilibrium in a pure exchange economy	99
4.3.4.2 Framework for a solution	100
(i) Bilateral bargaining and the notion of market/general equilibrium	103
(ii) In the beginning ... logistics	107
4.4 Decentralized pricing: Toward a theory of price adjustment	110
5 An afterthought: How elusive is the construction of a general model of decentralized exchange?	125
Appendix: Notes on the literature	135
A The budget constraint	137
B Hicks on trading at false prices	139
C Price-making mechanisms	141
D Thick-markets	145
E Search models of trade	150
F Market-makers, and price and quantity adjustments	162
