

SUOMALAISEN TIEDEAKATEMIAN TOIMITUKSIA
ANNALES ACADEMIÆ SCIENTIARUM FENNICÆ

Sarja-ser. HUMANIORA nide-tom. 305

HEIKKI MIKKELI

HYGIENE IN
THE EARLY MODERN
MEDICAL TRADITION

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	7
Introduction	8

PART I

THE ADOPTION OF CLASSICAL DIETETICS IN THE RENAISSANCE

1. The tradition of classical dietetics	14
1.1. The role of dietetics in classical humoralism	14
1.2. The six non-naturals in medieval medicine	19
1.3. Medical humanism and the recovery of classical dietetics	23
1.4. The division of medicine and new forms of learning	32
2. The idea of preventive medicine in the Renaissance	41
2.1. Three types of bodies and the three parts of prevention	41
2.2. The organization of the preventive part	46
2.3. The amount of the non-naturals: six or even more?	54
2.4. The contents of the non-naturals	58
3. Popular health books: mirrors of academic teaching?	69
3.1. The expansion of health books	69
3.2. The quest for longevity	73
3.3. Elyot and Cornaro: sober life in the castle of health?	80
3.4. Too many rules: everybody as his own physician	92

PART II

BUILDING A SCIENTIFIC HYGIENE IN THE ENLIGHTENMENT

4. The fate of classical dietetics	98
4.1. The place of hygiene in medical studies	98
4.2. Petrus Lauremberg at the gates of Aesculapius	101
4.3. The criticism of hygiene after the Lauremberg-debate	109
4.4. The idea of animal economy	113
5. The first history of hygiene: James Mackenzie's "History of Health"	119
5.1. The use of history and the measurable method	119
5.2. Past authors in Mackenzie's history	126
5.3. Rules of health as the basis for dietetics	138
5.4. The fate of Mackenzie's treatise	147
6. The French connection at the end of the eighteenth century	154
6.1. Private and public hygiene	154
6.2. Medicine as a part of the progress of civilization	159
6.3. Buchan and Tissot: enlightened health manuals	165
6.4. The fate of hygiene: education or medicine?	170
Conclusion	175
Bibliography	178
Index of names	191