CONTENTS

I. Introduction and background	1
I.1 Introduction	1
I.1.1 Summary 1, I.1.2 About construction modes 3, I.1.3 About validation and invalidation 9, I.1.4 Structure of the thesis 13,
I.2 Personal Construct Theory	15
I.2.1 General outline 15, I.2.2 Fundamental postul- ate and some relevant corollaries 15, I.2.3 Emo- tions 19, I.2.4 Psychotherapy and Fixed Role the- rapy 21,
I.3 Extreme Response Style (ERS)	22
I.3.1 Ambiguities of the research area 22, I.3.2 Rating and response 23, I.3.3 Set and style 23, I.3.4 Reliability 24, I.3.5 Extremeness and di- rection 25, I.3.6 ERS, polarization and persona- lity 25, I.3.7 Maladjustment and meaningfulness 26,
I.4 Cognitive Complexity	27
I.4.1 Integration 27, I.4.2 Change 28,
I.5 A Statistical Formula of Polarization	30
I.6 The Role Construct Repertory (REP-) Test	32
I.6.1 Characteristics of the test 32, I.6.2 The list form of the test 33, I.6.3 Repertory grid 34, I.6.4 Repol -III 38,
II. Modes of Construction	42
II.1 Introduction	42
II.2 Construction Modes Related to Psychological Functioning	43
II.2.1 Polarization and psychological functioning 44, II.2.2 Integrated construction 45, II.2.3 Li- mitations of integrated construction 47, II.2.4 Integration and psychological functioning 49,
II.3 Construction Modes and Meaningfulness	55
II.3.1 Areas of meaningfulness 55, II.3.2 Sum- marizing the predictions on meaningfulness and construction 60, II.3.3 Meaningfulness of the stimulus material 61, II.3.4 The influence of construction of personal constructs by ex- perienced meaningfulness of construct poles 62, II.3.5 The influence on construction of per- sonal constructs by experienced meaningful- ness of construct-application 63, II.3.6 A com- parison between personal and extraneous con- structs 66,

II.4	The Interdependency Between Subjects and Construct	69
II.4.1	The mutual influence between Subject and construct poles	69,
II.4.2	Neuroticism and loadings of construct poles	70,
II.4.3	Integrated outsider-experience and pole loadings	71,
II.5	Theoretical Formulation on Construction Modes	73
II.5.1	Unipolarization	73,
II.5.2	Positive polarization	74,
II.5.3	Negative polarization	74,
II.5.4	Bipolarization	75,
II.5.5	Neutral construction	75,
II.5.6	Integrated construction	76,
III.	Change of Construction Mode through Validation and Invalidation	77
III.1	Introduction	77
III.1.1	Encountering new stimuli	77,
III.1.2	Direction of change	78,
III.1.3	Loosening and tightening techniques of change	78,
III.1.4	Validation and invalidation	79,
III.1.5	The study of change in the laboratory	81,
III.1.6	The methods of intervention	82,
III.2	Change Capacities of Validating and Invalidating Interventions	83
III.3	Change Related to Psychological Functioning	87
III.3.1	Change and neuroticism	88,
III.3.2	Change and the outsider-experience	89,
III.3.3	Change and integrated outsider-experience	90,
III.3.4	Discussion	91,
III.4	Change Related to Initial Construction	92
III.4.1	Change of polarized constructs	92,
III.4.2	Change of depolarized constructs	94,
III.4.3	Change and construct rank	94,
III.5	Change Towards New Constructs	98
III.5.1	Capacity of change towards new constructs for validating and invalidating interventions	98,
III.5.2	Change towards new constructs related to initial construction	99,
III.5.3	Change towards new constructs related to psychological functioning	101,
III.5.4	Discussion	104,
III.6	An Effort at Applying the Repol -III Test Procedure in a Clinical Setting	105
III.7	Concluding Remarks	109
IV.	Tentative Theoretical Formulations	112
IV.1	Construction Modes Related to Developmental and Dysfunctional Processes	112
IV.1.1	Construction modes	112,
IV.1.2	Processes of development and dysfunction	115,
IV.1.3	Confusion and incongruence between communication levels	119,

IV.2 On Psychotherapy	125
IV.2.1 The psychotherapeutic framework 125, IV.2.2 The psychotherapeutic process 126, IV.2.3 Therapeu- tic techniques involving invalidation 130,
IV.3 Summing Up	142
IV.3.1 Summing up about dysfunctioning 142, IV.3.2 Summing up about psychotherapy 143,
Appendices	144
1. Fundamental postulate and corollaries of P.C. theory 144, 2. Repol-I 145, 3. Repol-III 149, 4. The outsider scale 155, 5. Question- naire for evaluation of group therapy 158, 6. Design of experiments 160, 7. Summary of results 162
