CONTENTS

PART I

Eigenprices: Definition and Characteristics

1	Introduction	3
2	The challenge of comparability	6
3	'Cost-fetishism' – monomania versus pluralism	12
4	'Use-fetishism'	18
5	Eigenprices	22
6	The basic scheme in algebraic terms	25
7	The 'full-cost pricing' of commodities – valuation by cost	29
8	The 'full-price costing' of factors – valuation by use	32
9	Alternative interpretations of 'use-norms'	35
10	Eigenprices and derivatives – definition and algebra	41
11	Eigencost and eigenyield	44
12	The 'scaling' of eigenprices	50
13	A method for generating eigen-prices and cost ratios	52

PART II

Eigenprices: Historical Parallels, Special Cases, and Extensions

14	The production of commodities by means of primary factors only ('feedback-free' models)	57
15	The link with marginal analysis – a linear programming approach	60
16	The link with marginal analysis – the Principle of Reciprocal Marginality generalized	63
17	The link with marginal analysis – a detailed application of the PRM to two-by-two models	66

18	The production of commodities by means of commodities only ('factor-free' models)	76
19	'Partial' eigenprices – specific uses	79
20	OECD shadow prices for project appraisal	82
21	'Partial' eigenprices – specific factors	89
22	'Marxian labour values	91
23	Eigenprices – a summary of basic characteristics	96
24	Eigenprices – possible uses	98
25	Caveats	101

PART III

Eigenprices: A Foray into the Real World

26	Introduction	107
IIIa	A Pilot Survey of Eigenprices from Cross-section Data	109
27	The data	109
28	The problem of aggregation	113
29	Price-deviance and eigen-yield	116
30	Measured eigenprices and current pricing behaviour	121
31	Structural eigenratios	125
32	Further experiments with eigenprices	127
IIIb	Time-series Analysis for the Netherlands and Hungary (Special Annex contributed by Dr A. E. Steenge)	129
33	Introduction	129
34	Brief characterization of the postwar Dutch economy	133
35	Eigenprices for the Netherlands, 1948–78	137
36	Discussion of the results for the Netherlands	143
37	A brief characterization of postwar Hungary	146
38	Empirical results for Hungary, 1970–79	150
39	Discussion of the results for Hungary	158
40	Concluding remarks	161
