

A Commonwealth of the People

*Popular Politics and England's Long
Social Revolution, 1066–1649*

David Rollison

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Preface: points of departure	page	x
Introduction An uncommon tradition		1
1 A study of social revolution		1
2 Meanings of commonwealth		13
3 Revolutions of politics: revolutions of commonality		21
4 Timescapes: defining the early modern		29
Part I: The emergent commonality		31
1 What came before: antecedent structures and emergent themes		33
1.1 A new longue duree		33
1.2 War bands, indigenes and the causes of change		36
1.3 The last conquest, 1066–c.1150		39
1.4 The Norman yoke		41
1.5 Return of the repressed: tyranny and the commonweal in John of Salisbury's body politic		47
1.6 Remembering landscape: a story-map of c.1190		60
2 The formation of a constitutional landscape, c.1159–1327		63
2.1 Demographic depression: population trends, 1066–1650		64
2.2 Signs of life: trafike		69
2.3 Elementary particles: enterprise and the resourceful family		73
2.4 Circling the king: the birth of resistance theory		77
2.5 Enter the middle people		84
2.6 Meanings of 'commonalty': Peatling Magna, 1265		91
2.7 The armed hand		100
2.8 Commons versus nobles: news from Courtrai (1302)		105
2.9 The deposing of kings: the afterlife of Edward II		109
3 The power of a common language		119
3.1 Vernacular populism to c.1400		119
3.2 Native tongues		125
3.3 'Middle' English		129

3.4	Storytelling: public opinion before the invention of print	136
3.5	The common voice	143
3.6	Lollarene man: Piers Plowman's quest for truth	148
3.7	Individual souls in a communal landscape	157
3.8	Ubiquitous vernacular heterodoxy: the case of Julian of Norwich	167
3.9	Reactionaries	171
3.10	Obedience and authority: the great chain of meaning	181
3.11	Two ideas of politics in the disputation between William Tyndale and Sir Thomas More	184

Part II: Accumulating a tradition: popular resistance and rebellion, 1327–1549 203

4	Discords, quarrels and factions of the commonalty: an ensemble of popular demands, 1328–1381	205
4.1	Populism as a way of understanding the history of politics	205
4.2	Peasant resistance: Thornbury, 1328–52	209
4.3	Mocking the king's justice: Ipswich, 1344	211
4.4	The heretical hermit of Hertfordshire: Richard of Fulham against the Statute of Labourers, 1357	214
4.5	The great rumour of the 1370s	219
4.6	Westminster: the Good Parliament of 1376	222
4.7	Collecting the poll tax: Nottingham, 1377	227
4.8	Reactionary fear and loathing: the Church and common rebels	232
5	The spectre of commonalty: popular rebellion and the commonweal, 1381–1549	236
5.1	Res plebeia	236
5.2	The spectre of the commonalty	240
5.3	'If the end be wele then all is wele': birth of a common keyword	247
5.4	Unnatural heat: the crisis of 1381–1450	252
5.5	Good old cause or 'premature reformation': Jack Sharpe's rebellion	267
5.6	The crisis continues: rising for the commonweal, 1450–1549	273
5.7	The tradition of rebellion	284

Part III: The English explosion 293

6	How trade became an affair of state: the politics of industry, 1381–1640	301
6.1	The propensity of industrial districts for resistance, riot and rebellion	301
6.2	Industry transforms the landscape	311
6.3	A recurring theme: 'deindustrialization'	316
6.4	The emergence of the political economy outlook	326
6.5	Jack Winchcombe's political economy	329
6.6	Deindustrialization again: the 1620s	335

7	Touching the wires: industry and empire	339
7.1	A new way of seeing the constitutional landscape: Fortescue, Smith and the political economy outlook	339
7.2	Old empire and new: the battle of Pantalarea	350
7.3	Touching the wires: Old Hakluyt and the conjuncture of industry and empire	361
7.4	Mobilizing an imperial economy	370
7.5	England is not bounded by its horizon: the 'theorick part of commerce'	378
7.6	Global interdisciplinarity: Elizabethan intelligence	383

Part IV: The empowered community 397

8	'The first pace that is sick': the revolution of politics in Shakespeare's Coriolanus	399
8.1	'Take but degree away'	399
8.2	Mocking the body politic	402
8.3	The spectre of comparison: Shakespeare's prophecy	414
9	'Boiling hot with questions': the English revolution and the parting of the ways	416
9.1	To defend God's empire of England: 'the empowered community'	416
9.2	The middle sort: Elizabethan incorporation or recurring pattern?	423
9.3	One-way traffic: the fallacy of court-centred history	427
9.4	The explosive public sphere	435
9.5	Behemoth versus Leviathan: the revolutionary public sphere	443
9.6	Rascability rising: precipitating rebellion	451
9.7	The constitutional landscape redefined: settlement versus mobility	455
	Index	465