

Technical choice innovation and economic growth

Essays on American and British experience in the nineteenth century

PAUL A. DAVID

Professor of Economics, Stanford University

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

	page
Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction: Technology, history and growth	1
Concepts and preconceptions
1 Labor scarcity and the problem of technological practice and progress in nineteenth-century America	19
Generation
2 Learning by doing and tariff protection: a reconsideration of the case of the ante-bellum United States cotton textile industry	95
Addendum: Estimated rates of labor quality change	169
3 The 'Horndal effect' in Lowell, 1834–56: a short-run learning curve for integrated cotton textile mills	174
Diffusion
4 The mechanization of reaping in the ante-bellum Midwest	195
Addendum: Threshold farm size	220
5 The landscape and the machine: technical interrelatedness, land tenure and the mechanization of the corn harvest in Victorian Britain	233
Appendix A: Technical notes	276
Appendix B: Sources of the parameters and variables	281
Ramifications
6 Transport innovations and economic growth: Professor Fogel on and off the rails	291
References	315
Index	325