

Management consulting

A guide to the profession

Edited by M. Kubr

TECHNISCHE HOCHSCHULE DARMSTADT
Fachbereich 1
Gesamtbibliothek
Betriebswirtschaftslehre
Inventar-Nr.:	16.537
Abstell-Nr.:	A12/801
Sachgebiete:	1.3.0.1
	6.4.

International Labour Office Geneva

CONTENTS

Foreword	1
Part I Management consulting in perspective
<hr/>
Chapter 1 Nature and purpose of management consulting	7
1.1 Definition	7
1.2 Why are consultants used?	8
1.3 Who uses consultants?	10
1.4 External and internal consulting	12
Chapter 2 Range, scope and characteristics of consulting work	15
2.1 Range of problems	15
2.2 The consultant's roles	18
2.3 Basic types of assignment	19
Chapter 3 The consultant-client relationship	21
3.1 Who is the client?	21
3.2 Creating and maintaining sound relationships	22
Chapter 4 Consulting and change	27
4.1 The process of change	27
4.2 Implementing change	30
4.3 Techniques for assisting change	35
4.4 Tactical guides for implementing change	36
4.5 Environmental factors bearing on the change process.	41
Chapter 5 Management consulting as a profession	45
5.1 Key aspects of professionalism in consulting	45
5.2 Professional associations and codes of conduct	49
5.3 The clients' contribution to consulting ethics	51
Literature to Part I	52

Management consulting

Part II Preparing and controlling operating assignments

Chapter 6	The management survey	57
6.1	Preparatory steps	57
6.2	The course of a management survey	59
6.3	Survey methodology	61
6.4	Subjects for appraisal	65
6.5	Survey facts and figures	73
Chapter 7	Financial appraisal	77
7.1	The balance sheet and the income statement	77
7.2	Interpretation of financial statements	82
7.3	Use of ratios in financial analysis	83
Chapter 8	Survey report	93
8.1	Sections of the report	93
8.2	Estimating fees and costs	95
8.3	Presenting the report	96
8.4	Survey notes	97
Chapter 9	Planning and staffing the assignment	99
9.1	Assignment strategy	99
9.2	Staffing the assignment	100
9.3	Over-all assignment plan	102
9.4	Short-term planning	103
Chapter 10	Controlling the assignment	105
10.1	Pre-assignment arrangements	105
10.2	Briefings	106
10.3	Starting the assignment	108
10.4	Operating consultants' self-discipline and self-control	109
10.5	Control by supervising consultant and client	111
10.6	Further roles of the supervisor	113
Literature to Part II		115

Part III Methods of executing assignments

Chapter 11	Framework of an operating assignment	119
11.1	Basic steps in assignments	119
11.2	Further refinements in problem diagnosis	120
11.3	Matching methodology to problem nature	121

Chapter 12 Fact finding	123
12.1 Scope of assignment facts	123
12.2 Defining necessary facts	124
12.3 Sources and ways of obtaining facts	127
12.4 Notes, records and reports on fact finding	136
Chapter 13 Fact analysis	139
13.1 Classification	140
13.2 Analysis of relationships and causes	141
13.3 Comparison	143
13.4 Synthesis	144
Chapter 14 Developing and presenting proposals	145
14.1 Developing alternative proposals	145
14.2 Evaluating and choosing alternatives	150
14.3 Presenting proposals to the client	156
Chapter 15 Implementation	159
15.1 The consultant's roles in implementation	159
15.2 Training and development of client staff	161
15.3 Maintenance and control of the new practice	163
15.4 Final assignment reports	165
Literature to Part III	168

Part IV Consulting in various areas of management

Chapter 16 Consulting in general management	173
16.1 Nature and scope of assignments in general management	173
16.2 Basic choices	175
16.3 The decision making process	177
16.4 Organisational structure	177
16.5 Management styles	178
Chapter 17 Consulting in financial management	181
17.1 Nature and purpose of financial consultations	181
17.2 Enterprise development	182
17.3 Capital management	183
17.4 Least-cost operational alternatives	184
17.5 Accounting systems	185

Management consulting

Chapter 18 Consulting in marketing management	187
18.1 General considerations	187
18.2 The marketing strategy level	188
18.3 Marketing operations	191
18.4 Consulting in commercial enterprises	193
Chapter 19 Consulting in production management	195
19.1 The product	196
19.2 Methods and organisation of production	197
19.3 The human aspects of production	204
Chapter 20 Consulting in information systems and data processing	207
20.1 Information versus decision and control systems	207
20.2 How much information, when and how?	208
20.3 Systems improvement and integration	209
20.4 Computer data processing	210
20.5 Some organisational options offered by computer technology	214
20.6 We have a computer but it doesn't work	215
Chapter 21 Consulting in personnel management	217
21.1 Personnel policies and the consultant's audit	217
21.2 Methods for improving personnel management	219
21.3 Consulting in labour-management relations	223
Chapter 22 Consulting in small enterprise management	227
22.1 Characteristics, opportunities and problems of the sector	227
22.2 The role and profile of the consultant	229
22.3 Some practical consulting situations	231
Literature to Part IV	237

Part V Organisation of consulting

Chapter 23 Main types of consulting organisations	245
23.1 Specialisation in management consulting	245
23.2 Organisational and legal forms of consulting units	246
Chapter 24 Technical services of consulting organisations	251
24.1 Technical support services	251
24.2 Special client services	254

Chapter 25 Structuring and controlling a consulting organisation	257
25.1 Organisational structure	257
25.2 Top management	261
25.3 Professional guidance and control of quality	261
25.4 Financial and operational control	263
25.5 Internal administration	268
25.6 Headquarters accommodation	272
Literature to Part V	274

Part VI Developing management consultants

Chapter 26 Consulting as a career	277
26.1 Personal characteristics of consultants	277
26.2 Recruitment and selection	278
26.3 Career development	281
Chapter 27 Training of new consultants	285
27.1 Objectives of training	285
27.2 Patterns of initial training	286
27.3 The trainer's role	289
27.4 Subjects to be covered by initial training	290
27.5 Training methods	293
27.6 Evaluation of training	295
27.7 Training new consultants in developing countries	299
Chapter 28 Further training and development of consultants	303
28.1 Principal directions of consultants' development	303
28.2 Organisation and methods of further development	304
28.3 Planning and budgeting for training and development	306
Literature to Part VI	308

Appendices

Appendix 1 Associations of management consultants in selected countries	313
Appendix 2 Professional codes (examples)	317
Appendix 3 Terms of business	325
Appendix 4 Case history of consulting in production management (Apollo Garment Manufacturers)	327
Appendix 5 Case history of process consulting (Apex Manufacturing Company)	337
Appendix 6 Person-to-person communication in consulting	353
Appendix 7 Consultant report writing	361
Appendix 8 Training films	367