

Building the American Highway System

Engineers as Policy Makers

Bruce E. Seely

Temple University Press
Philadelphia

Contents

Series Preface	ix
Acknowledgments	xiii
Introduction: Experts in a Democratic Society	3
Part I Building the Constituency and Setting the Patterns, 1890–1921	9
Chapter One The Early Good Roads Movement, 1890–1905	11
Creating Public Support: Roy Stone and the LAW	11
Promotion and Politics: Martin Dodge and the OPRI, 1899–1905	16
Chapter Two The Progressives, Expertise, and Highways, 1905–16	24
Expertise and Highways: Technical Information	25
Expertise and Highways: Management and Administration	30
The Social Justification of Good Roads	35
Federal Aid for Highways, 1910–16	36
Chapter Three The Creation of a National Highway System, 1916–21	46
False Start for Federal Aid	47
Federal Aid versus a National Highway Commission	51
The Federal Highway Act of 1921	59
MacDonald's Policy and Consensus	62
Part II The Golden Age of Highway Building, 1921–36	67
Chapter Four Building the Federal-Aid Highway System, 1921–36	71
Cooperation and Federal Aid	72
Federal Aid in Michigan	80
The BPR and State Highway Systems: The Role of Expertise	83
Roads and Relief, 1929–36	88
Highway Building, 1921–36	96

Chapter Five	Highway Research and the Cooperative Ethos, 1918–40	100
	The BPR and Highway Research	101
	The BPR and Cooperative Research: The Highway Research Board	109
	The Limits to Cooperation	114
Chapter Six	The Paradox of Cooperation and Expertise: Consensus Highway Standards, 1921–39	118
	The Crusade for Standards in Industry	119
	State Highway Specifications: The BPR and the AASHO	121
	Consensus Standards for Highway Materials: The BPR and the ASTM	127
	The Contradiction of the Associative Philosophy	131
Part III	From Rural to Urban Road Building, 1936–56	137
Chapter Seven	The Failure of Consensus, 1936–38	141
	Road Building in the New Deal	141
	Alternatives to the Federal-Aid System: Rural Roads and Superhighways	145
	Urban Highways in the 1920s and 1930s	149
	Heading Off the Competition: BPR Responses, 1935–38	156
Chapter Eight	Planning and Master Plans, 1938–44	165
	Highway Planning Surveys and a Master Plan: Toll Roads and Free Roads	166
	The National Interregional Highway Committee and Postwar Planning	177
	Building a New Consensus, 1943–44	182
	The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1944	187
Chapter Nine	Shaping a New Consensus: From Postwar Struggles to Interstate Highways, 1945–56	192
	Postwar Road Building, 1945–48	193
	Rural versus Urban Highways, 1948–50	196
	More Money for Roads, 1950–53	201
	Toll Roads and Interstate Highways, 1950–53	204

The Emergence of a New Consensus, 1953–54	208
The National System of Interstate and Defense Highways, 1954–56	213
Politics or Expertise?	218
Conclusion Highway Engineers as Policy Makers	225
Abbreviations	241
Notes	245
Note on Sources	297
Index	305