

Mission, Colonialism and Liberation:

The Lutheran Church in Namibia
1840-1966

Carl-J Hellberg

NEW NAMIBIA BOOKS

Verbum

Contents

List of Abbreviations	viii
Preface	ix
Introduction	1
Historiographical aspects of Namibia's precolonial history	1
Ethnography	2
Literature attempting to justify colonial occupation	3
Origin of the name 'Namibia'	6
Geography	7
The people of Namibia	9
Part I: Namibia before German Colonization: Socio-political and Economic Changes	18
1 Namibia's first, precolonial contacts with the Europeans	21
2 The Oorlam-Namas invade Nama and Herero territory	28
3 Pioneering missionary work in the interests of Christian Western civilization	39
4 Relations between the Rhenish Mission and the Oorlam-Namas and Hereros	46
The Mission as a resource for the Oorlam-Namas	46
The Rhenish missionaries' first encounter with Jonker Afrikaner	49
The position of missionaries and European traders during the 1860s	52
Growing European influence	55
5 The Rhenish Mission and demands for overseas protection	61
Requests for British protection	61
Successes of the Rhenish Mission in Namibia – and the beginnings of Finnish missionary work among the Ovambos	68

Part II: Church and Mission under German Colonial Domination, 1885-1915	74
6 The Rhenish Mission and German colonialism, 1884-1904	77
German colonial policy and the Berlin Congress, 1884-1885	77
The beginnings of German colonialism in Namibia, 1882-1885	81
The Rhenish Mission – and the Deutsche Kolonialgesellschaft für Südwestafrika, 1885-1889	87
The Rhenish Mission under Curt von François, 1889-1894	93
Growing tensions between the Rhenish Mission and the colonial authorities under Leutwein, 1894-1904	98
7 The Rhenish Mission during the Namibian wars, 1904-1907	109
The war breaks out	109
The Rhenish Mission during the war	117
Haussleiter – and his criticism of the peace terms	120
8 German colonization and Mission, 1907-1914	128
Colonial policy after 1907	128
Missionary work, 1907-1915	131
Part III: Church and Mission under South African Rule, 1915-1966	142
9 Namibia during World War I and the first years of South African occupation, 1914-1920	146
The war up to the German capitulation	146
Military administration and the conditions of missionary work between 1915 and 1920	148
10 Namibia as a League of Nations mandate, 1920-1939	160
Negotiations begin on the mandated territories	160
The German-speaking minority in Namibia under mandatory administration	162
South Africa's racial policy in Namibia, 1920-1939	168
Christian and syncretistic movements against racialism	171
– Garveyanism	171
– Uprisings inspired by Garveyanism	174

– The Bondelswarts uprising, May 1922	177
– The Rehoboth rebellion, 1925	182
– Samuel Maharero’s burial, 1923, and its consequences for the Rhenish Mission	185
11 Mission under South African racial policy, 1920-1939	193
The Union’s racialist legislation in the mandated territory of Namibia	193
Divided loyalties for the Rhenish Mission	196
The Finnish Missionary Society starts a Folkchurch	207
Other Missions: the Roman Catholics and the Anglicans	214
 Part IV: Church and Mission, and the National Movement of Liberation	 219
12 International and local commitment to the liberation struggle in co-operation with the United Nations after 1945	222
13 The Rhenish Mission and growing nationalism among its parishes	238
The Nama parishes	238
The Hereros and the Oruano Church	244
New trends within the Mission	258
14 The formation of the Ovambo Church and the liberation movement in Ovamboland, 1939-1966	268
 Conclusion	 282
Bibliography	291
Index	311