

The Debt Rescheduling Process

Marko Milivojević

St. Martin's Press, New York

Contents

---

List of tables	vii
List of figures	ix
Introduction	xi
1. Growth of developing countries' debts, 1973-1982	1
1.1 Extent of debt growth	1
1.2 Cutback in new lending	7
1.3 Exogenous causes of debt growth	13
1.4 Endogenous causes of debt growth	17
2. Consequences of developing countries' debts, 1982-1984	22
2.1 International financial system	22
2.2 Developing countries	32
2.3 Systemic resilience	39
3. The debt rescheduling process, 1982-1984	43
3.1 Precursors of 1982	43
3.2 Emergency response, 1982-1983	55
3.3 Consolidation, 1983-1984	73
4. The implications of the debt rescheduling process, 1982-1984	86
4.1 Involuntary lending	86
4.2 Free riders	89
4.3 Primacy of politics	94
4.4 Symbiosis and asymmetrical adjustment	99
5. The politics of debt, 1982-1984	111
5.1 Domestic politics	111
5.2 Co-operation and confrontation	122
5.3 International politics	128
5.4 Prescriptive proposals and the politically possible	140

vi Contents

6. Conclusion	158
6.1 International System	158
6.2 Rescheduling process	163
6.3 Developing countries	168
6.4 Commercial banks	171

Appendices

1. Statistical sources	176
2. Rescheduled debt, by country, 1956-1982	178
3. The Polish debt rescheduling negotiations, 1981-1984	179
4. The Costa Rican telex	184
5. The Nicaraguan Debt Rescheduling Agreement of 1980	186
6. The Mexican debt rescheduling negotiations, 1982-1984	190
7. The Brazilian debt rescheduling negotiations, 1982-1984	196
8. The Yugoslavian debt rescheduling negotiations, 1982-1984	204
9. Structure of the Mexican Advisory Committee, 1982-1984	208
10. The Institute of International Finance (Ditchley Institute)	209
11. Merchant/investment bank advisers to the Governments of developing countries in the rescheduling process, 1982-1984	212
12. The Cartagena Process: Chronology of Events, 1984-1985	219

Bibliography	222
---------------------	-----

Index	232
--------------	-----