

Democracy and authoritarianism in South Asia

A comparative and historical perspective

Ayesha Jalal

Columbia University

Contents

List of maps	page	ix
Preface		xi
Introduction		I
1 The colonial legacy in India and Pakistan		9
The historical context of partition		12
The administrative legacy		16
The economics of partition and separate defence		22
The ideological dimension		25
2 State formation and political processes in India and Pakistan, 1947 to c.1971		29
Contrasting inheritances and outcomes, 1947-1951		31
Party politics and structural authoritarianism in India, 1947-1967		38
Party politics and military dominance in Pakistan, 1947-1971		48
Conclusion		63
3 The 'populist' era and its aftermath in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh, 1971 to c.1993		66
Indira Gandhi and Indian 'populism'		70
Bhuttoism or populism? The case of Pakistan		77
The populist interlude in Bangladesh		85
Populism reconsidered		89
Reclaiming democratic ground in India, 1977-1993		91
Resurgent authoritarianism and the democratic compulsion in Pakistan and Bangladesh		100
Conclusion		120
4 The state and political economy, 1947 to c.1993		122
India's political economy of development		123
The political economy of defence in Pakistan and Bangladesh		140
Conclusion		156

5	Central power and regional dissidence	157
	India's democratic federalism?	161
	Dissidence and rebellion under military authoritarianism	183
	Conclusion	199
6	Societies, cultures and ideologies: hybrids in contrived monoliths	201
	Interpreting subcontinental social mosaics	202
	Language as culture and ideology	223
	Monolithic ideologies and societal dissonance	233
	Conclusion	245
7	Conclusion	247
	Bibliographical essay	258
	Index	276

Maps

- | | | |
|---|---|---------|
| 1 | The Indian Empire: administrative divisions, 1947 | page 17 |
| 2 | Political divisions of South Asia, 1972 | 68–9 |

Map 1 is based on Joseph E. Schwartzberg (ed.), A Historical Atlas of South Asia (Chicago and London, 1978), p. 76.