Public Theater in Golden Age
Madrid and Tudor-Stuart London
Class, Gender and Festive Community

IVAN CAÑADAS
Hallym University, South Korea

ASHGATE
Contents

List of Illustrations
ix

General Editor's Preface
xi

Acknowledgements
xiii

Introduction

1
Theater and Society in Early Modern Madrid and London
  - Patronage and the status of the actor
  - The public theater and its audience
  - Convention, controversy, and Lope de Vega's theory and practice
  - National identity in the dialogic dramas of Madrid and London
  - Marginality in the theater: playwrights, ambiguity and drama

2
The Female Role in the Theaters of London and Madrid
  - Overview
  - Women in the theater: actors, playgoers and demarcation
  - Women, subversion and the theatrical medium
  - Ambivalence and the female actor: Lope de Vega's La dama boba
  - Sex, gender and androgyny: crossdressing in Madrid and London
  - Grotesque scapegoat and angelic sacrifice: androgyny in the theater
  - Androgyny and carnival in early modern literature and theater
  - Carnival, androgyny and the crossdressed heroine
3 The Communal Appeal of Thomas Dekker's The Shoemaker's Holiday

Overview

The Shoemaker's Holiday: Class and Elizabethan playgoing culture 77
Dekker, 'Mad' Simon Eyre, and the dialogics of courting favor 83
Class, gender and festive violence on the Elizabethan stage 90
Youth groups, homosociality and rioting in the popular theater 94
Journeymen, masters and wives: homosocial desire in the theater 99

4 Rank, Gender and Honor in the Peasant Plays of Lope de Vega: A Revaluation

Overview

Peribáñez y el Comendador de Ocaña and the peasant drama 109
El mejor alcalde, el rey: divine kingship, feudalism and peasant honor 116
The destabilizing aspects of El mejor alcalde, el rey 120
El villano en su rincón: the King and the Peasant 125

5 Class, Gender and Carnival: Communal Heroism in Fuente Ovejuna

Overview

Fuente Ovejuna and the moral parameters of festive drama 139
Killing tyrants: punishment and Spanish festive tradition 146
Fuente Ovejuna, historicity and communal heroism 151
Laurencia: the unruly woman as popular hero 156
The community and its antagonist: tyrant, devil, and androgyny 168
Mengo: The clown's awakening, carnival and androgyny 174
Festive theater and the pluralist ideal of communal androgyny 176

Coda 185

Bibliography 189

Index 225