

TALAL NIZAMEDDIN

Russia and the Middle East

Towards a New Foreign Policy

HURST & COMPANY, LONDON

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	page iii
Chapters
1. Introduction: the making of a national foreign policy	1
Soviet interests and the Middle East: competition and co-existence	4
Russia and the Middle East: setting the parameters	9
Note on sources	12
2. The Soviet Union and the Middle East, 1945-1985: opportunities and limitations	16
Stalin and the bipolar world	17
Khrushchev broadens Moscow's horizons	20
Brezhnev: consolidation leads to stagnation	25
Reorientation after split with Egypt	33
The military dimension	38
Conclusion: failure outweighs success	40
3. Gorbachev's New Thinking: the transition period	44
Redefining alliances and threats	47
Israel and New Thinking	47
The Soviet Union and its Arab 'allies'	51
Gorbachev and pro-Western states	55
Moscow and the Iran-Iraq dilemma	58
The consequences of New Thinking	64
4. Problems, debates, ideas: forming a national foreign policy under Yeltsin	71
The end of the USSR	72

	Yeltsin and the West	74
	Russia's redefinition of the Middle East.	78
	Debates, reforms and the Middle East	83
	Conclusion: Primakov hones a national policy	99
5.	Russian-Israeli relations: facing the inevitable	108
	Problems of the past in Soviet-Israeli diplomatic relations	108
	Attitudes and perceptions	111
	Russian national interests and Israel	113
	The Middle East peace process	116
	Obstacles in Russian-Israeli relations	122
	Primakov and Israel	128
	The importance of trade relations	137
	Conclusion: between optimism and realism	139
6.	Russia and Israel's neighbours: a new basis of relations	145
	The decline of Soviet influence	146
	Russia and the PLO: a friendship without commitments	147
	Russia, Jordan and the triumph of realism	156
	Russian relations with Syria and Lebanon: the old and the new	160
	Conclusion: a balanced policy	176
7.	Saudi Arabia and Iraq: Russia between new friends and old allies	184
	Saudi Arabia and the USSR	185
	Russia and Saudi Arabia: failed expectations	190
	Iraq: an old friend with many enemies	197
	Russian-Iraqi relations: establishing a new framework	202
	Conclusion: squaring the Gulf circle	213
8.	Russia, Turkey and Iran: a regional power game	220
	Post-Second World War relations with Iran and Turkey	221
	Soviet relations with Iran (1970-91)	223

The Soviet Union and Turkey to 1991	226
Russia and Turkey: diplomacy and trade on separate tracks	228
Russia and Iran	233
A new dimension: Central Asia and the Caucasus	240
Conclusion: balancing regional interests	248
9. Conclusion	254
Retrospective overview	255
Gorbachev's foreign policy overhaul	258
A new chapter in foreign policy making	260
National interests and the Middle East	265
The grey lines of Russia's policy	269
Bibliography	273
Index	286