

Harare

Inheriting a settler-colonial city:
change or continuity?

Carole Rakodi

University of Wales, Cardiff, UK

JOHN WILEY & SONS

Chichester • New York • Brisbane • Toronto • Singapore

Contents

List of figures	viii
List of tables	xi
Preface	xiii
Exchange rates	xv
1 The political and economic context of Harare	1
Colonialism and urbanisation	1
Independence or continued dependence: the end of colonialism?	7
Harare: a brief sketch	8
The political economy of Southern Rhodesia and Zimbabwe	11
The settler state	11
Independent Zimbabwe	15
The history of urban development	24
Historical development of the urban labour force	24
Patterns of urban settlement	28
Urban administration	32
The evolution of the urban local government system under the settler government	32
Changes since independence: revolution or evolution?	35
2 Urban structure	44
Salisbury, 1890–1979	44
Beginnings	44
Between the wars	49
Renewed growth	49
Federation and beyond	51
Chitungwiza	53

vi Harare

Water and waste in Harare	58
Water supply	58
Sewage collection and disposal	61
Solid waste management	61
Land use patterns in contemporary Harare	62
The city centre	62
Industrial areas	67
Housing the urban workforce	69
The high income population and its needs	70
The fate of squatters	74
Epworth	76
Getting around: the transport system in Harare	78
Providing for the car	78
Public transport: efficient or struggling on?	80
Planning the city of Harare	84
Early plans	85
Planning for future development: the Harare Combination Master Plan	90
3 The city's economy	102
Employment	106
The structure of employment in Harare	109
Manufacturing	112
Trade	114
The employment situation of low income households	115
Wages and incomes	116
Wages and incomes in Salisbury	117
The urban workforce since 1980: participating in the fruits of independence?	118
Women and work	131
The informal sector in the urban economy	134
Informal sector entrepreneurs at work	135
Policy and prospects	139
4 Social characteristics of Harare's population	142
Demographic trends	145
Spatial distribution of the urban population	149
Migration and mobility	153
The migrants of the late 1960s and early 1970s	155
An urbanised present day population?	160
Urban lives	163
The social characteristics of households	163
Urban-rural links	168

Urban agriculture	171
Men's and women's lives	173
5 The land development process	176
Actors in the land development process	176
Private sector actors	176
Public sector actors	182
The paths by which land is developed	183
Private sector residential and commercial development	184
Low income residents and the supply of housing land	192
6 Housing	198
Components of the housing stock	199
The private production of high and middle income housing	201
Private rental housing	210
Public sector housing production	218
Unauthorised dwellings	230
Factors influencing housing supply	231
Land constraints	232
Infrastructure constraints	233
Construction sector constraints	234
Building materials	236
The consumption of housing	238
Housing needs, effective demand and affordability	238
Housing finance	241
The exchange of housing: who benefits?	246
The system of exchange	247
Commodification of public sector housing	248
7 Issues in planning and managing Harare's future development	255
Harare's future role	255
Issues at the regional level	258
Implementing the one-city concept	261
The supply of housing	264
Development and planning	265
The inherited urban form	270
Conclusion	274
Bibliography	276
Index	291