

Linguistic Imperialism

Robert Phillipson

Oxford University Press 1992

Contents

Acknowledgements	iii
1 ELT: Taking stock of a world commodity
The aims of this book	1
English for all?	5
Professional and ethical aspects of ELT 'aid'	11
Notes	15
2 English, the dominant language
English in core English-speaking countries	17
English in periphery-English countries	23
Language promotion	31
Opposition to the dominance of English	35
Notes	37
3 Linguistic imperialism: theoretical foundations
A cautionary word on terminology	38
A working definition of English linguistic imperialism	46
Linguistic imperialism and linguisticism	50
Cultural imperialism in science, the media, and education	57
The State, hegemony, and ELT	65
Notes	77
4 Earlier work relevant to linguistic imperialism
Language spread	78
The sociology of language	82
Language planning	86
Theoretical models of language teaching and learning	90
Linguistic human rights	93

Two approaches, Wardhaugh and Calvet	98
Notes	107
5 The colonial linguistic inheritance
Their masters' language	109
Colonial educational language policy and practice	110
The importance of English as a colonial inheritance	128
Notes	133
6 British and American promotion of English
The origins and structure of the British Council	137
The British strategy for expanding ELT	145
American promotion of English	152
Anglo-American collaboration	164
Notes	169
7 Creating a profession: the structure and tenets of ELT
Creating a British academic base for ELT	173
ELT and educational language planning for under-developed countries	181
Tenet one: English is best taught monolingually	185
Tenet two: the ideal teacher of English is a native speaker	193
Tenet three: the earlier English is taught the better the results	199
Tenet four: the more English is taught, the better the results	209
Tenet five: if other languages are used much, standards of English will drop	212
Conclusions: the legacy of Makerere	215
Notes	218
8 English language teaching in action
ELT research	223
ELT in 'aid' to education	238
The overall context of ELT 'aid'	238
EFL, ESL or . . . ?	242
Principles for the analysis of ELT in 'aid'	246
Postulate 1: political disconnection	250
Postulate 2: narrowly technical training	256

English for special and new purposes	262
Notes	267
9 Arguments in linguistic imperialist discourse
Types of argument and types of power	271
English-intrinsic arguments	273
English-extrinsic arguments	276
English-functional arguments	280
The means used to exert linguistic power	283
Arguments in language planning for Namibia	288
Notes	297
10 Linguistic imperialism and ELT
ELT: master-minded?	300
On the force of the evidence	308
Studying ELT and imperialism	313
Notes	319
Bibliography	322
Index	357