

Financing Poor Relief through Charitable Collections in Dutch Towns, c. 1600-1800

Daniëlle Teeuwen

Table of Contents

1	Introduction	9
	Poor relief in the Dutch Republic	10
	Research design	14
2	Organizing poor relief	23
	Reforming medieval social care	23
	Poor relief in a Golden Age	31
	The system under pressure	36
	Conclusion	39
3	Financing outdoor poor relief	41
	Income	42
	Collections and alms boxes	44
	Testamentary bequests and inter vivos gifts	49
	Income from capital and real estate	50
	Subsidies	54
	Developments in the financing of poor relief over time	56
	Tolerated religious charities	59
	Expenditure	61
	Financial management	62
	Balancing income and expenditure	65
	Crisis management	66
	Conclusion	71
4	Organizing collections	73
	Types and frequency	74
	Regulation and control	82
	Between nudge and obligation	90
	Conclusion	96
5	The rhetoric of giving	99
	Perceptions of poverty and charity	99
	Civic exhortations to give	102
	Charity as a civic and religious duty	103
	Methods of persuasion	106

Religious exhortations to give	110
Preaching in the early modern period	112
Views on wealth and poverty	114
Charity as a Christian duty	116
Guidelines for giving	118
Conclusion	120
6 Donating to collections	123
The donors	123
Collection gifts	132
Effective policies	132
The boundaries of voluntarism	136
Paying for poor relief	142
Conclusion	146
7 Conclusion	149
Financing poor relief in the Dutch Republic	149
Encouraging charitable giving	151
Donating to collections	154
Differences between localities and developments over time	156
Explaining the success of charitable collections in the Dutch Republic	159
Notes	161
Appendices	195
A Financial administration of poor relief institutions	195
B Income of poor relief institutions	200
C Income of poor relief institutions corrected for inflation	205
D Sermons and religious writings	210
Bibliography	213
Index	227
Amsterdam Studies in the Dutch Golden Age	231