

China's Minority Cultures: Identities and Integration Since 1912

Colin Mackerras

 LONGMAN

ST. MARTIN'S PRESS
NEW YORK

Contents

Preface	ix
1 Introduction	1
Culture	2
The minorities	3
Definitions	4
A note on sources	8
Policy background, 1912–1995	8
Economic background, 1912–1995	12
2 Religion, 1912–1949	19
Islam	19
Buddhism	22
Other religious forms	28
Women and religion	31
The Koreans	32
Conclusion	33
3 Pre-1949 Education	39
Traditional and non-national government systems	40
The National Government	49
Girls and education	54
Conclusion	55
4 Marriage and Divorce, Some Gender Issues Pre-1949	60
Family questions	61
Further gender issues	74
Conclusion	78
5 Literature and the Performing Arts, 1912–1949	86
Literature	87
The performing arts	95
Conclusion	102

6 Religion Among the Minority Nationalities, 1949–1995	109
Policy on religion and religious freedom	109
Religious revival in the 1980s and 1990s	114
Religion and family planning	120
Women and religion	121
Religion and politics	123
Conclusion	127
7 Minorities and the Education System, 1949–1995	133
Overall CCP policy on minorities education	134
Structure and 'nationality schools'	135
Availability of education	137
Inequalities and literacy	139
Language and education	141
Female secular education	145
Minority teachers	148
Education and religion	150
Conclusion	152
8 Some Gender Issues, Marriage and Divorce, 1949–1995	158
Labour and political participation among women	160
Grassroots observations on women and gender relations	161
Marriage	165
Divorce	176
Conclusion	178
9 Literature and the Performing Arts, 1949–1995	184
Literature	187
The performing arts	195
Conclusion	200
10 Conclusion	207
Ethnic identities and integration: Specific cultural factors	208
Reasons for the rise in ethnic identities	214
Imagined communities?	215
Identity versus integration: Prospects for the future	217
References	223
Index	238