

READING COMPREHENSION AND TEXT ORGANIZATION

Alastair Sharp

Mellen Studies in Education
Volume 73

The Edwin Mellen Press
Lewiston•Queenston•Lampeter

Table of Contents

List of tables	i
Acknowledgements	iii
Preface	v
Introduction	1
Chapter 1 Hong Kong: bilingualism and biliteracy	7
Languages in Hong Kong and the bilingual education system
Reading in English in schools
Chapter 2 Reading and text difficulty	29
A definition of reading
Features associated with difficult text
Research studies into the effects of rhetorical organization on reading comprehension
Concluding comment
Chapter 3 Cultural differences in rhetorical preferences	71
The relevance of contrastive rhetoric
Methodology issues
Reading and contrastive rhetoric
Contrastive rhetoric and pedagogy
Conclusion
Chapter 4 Is there a Chinese learning style ?	89
Confucian values and educational development
Surface and Deep Learning: Memorization and Understanding
Reading Styles and Memorization
Chinese - Western Comparisons of Academic Achievement and Intelligence
Conclusion
Chapter 5 Studying reading behaviour	113
Testing reading behaviour: introductory comments
Reading behaviour: a survey of methods
Methods selected for research into the comprehension of rhetorical structures
Conclusion

Chapter 6	Methodology: the preparation of the texts and tests	149
	Text Preparation
	Test preparation and scoring criteria
	Experimental Procedure and Test Administration
Chapter 7	Results of the reading tests in three Hong Kong schools	201
	Data Analysis
	Summary of results and responses to research hypotheses
Chapter 8	Discussion of experimental results: factors which influence rhetorical structure as a feature of comprehension	239
	Results of comparable studies and the effect of variable experimental design
	Chinese-English differences and possible influences on reading comprehension
	The effects of culture and schooling
Chapter 9	Conclusion	267
Appendices		275
References		285
Index		317