

The demography of Roman Egypt

ROGER S. BAGNALL

Professor of Classics and History, Columbia University and

BRUCE W. FRIER

Professor of Classics and Roman Law, University of Michigan

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

List of figures	page xi
List of tables	xii
Foreword by Ansley J. Coale	xiii
Preface	xv
A note on references and abbreviations	xix
1 The census returns	1
1 The documents and the history of the census	1
2 The census process	11
3 The form of the returns	20
4 Government uses of the returns	26
2 The census returns as demographic evidence	31
1 The scientific study of human populations	31
2 Data bases	38
3 Demographic quality of the census returns	40
4 Assessment of the census returns	50
3 Households	53
1 The population of Egypt	53
2 Household forms	57
3 Metropoleis and villages	66
4 Female life expectancy	75
1 Life tables and stable populations	76
2 The female age structure	81
3 The female life table	84

5 Male life expectancy and the sex ratio	91
1 The sex ratio	92
2 The age-specific sex ratio	95
3 A provisional male life table	99
4 The total Egyptian age distribution	103
5 Egyptian mortality: a general assessment	109
6 Marriage	111
1 Age at first marriage	111
2 The age difference between husbands and wives	118
3 Marriage patterns	121
4 Brother-sister marriage	127
7 Fertility	131
1 Overall female fertility	131
2 Controls on population growth	141
3 Births outside of marriage	151
4 Births to slave women	151
8 Migration	161
9 Conclusion	171
1 A typical Mediterranean population?	171
2 A stable population?	171
Catalogue of census declarations	171
Appendixes
1 Minor corrections to census texts	31
2 Concordance of publications and household numbers	32
3 Statistical methods	33
4 Tables A-D	33
A Persons with exact ages	33
B Incidence of marriage	33
C Incidence of fertility	34
D Slave ages	34
Bibliography	34
Index	34