

Welfare Economics and the Theory of Economic Policy

Pieter Hennipman

Edited by

Donald Walker, Arnold Heertje and Hans van den Doel

Edward Elgar

Contents

Preface	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
Biographical sketch of Pieter Hennipman	xi
Introduction	xiii
1. On the theory of economic policy	1
2. Pareto optimality: value judgement or analytical tool?	59
3. Welfare economics: the Hennipman–Mishan debate	87
Welfare economics in an impasse? Some observations on Mishan's vision
The implications of alternative foundations for welfare economics by E.J. Mishan
Normative or positive: Mishan's half-way house
Welfare criteria: concluding comments by E.J. Mishan
The nature of welfare economics: a final note
4. The reasoning of a great methodologist: Mark Blaug on the nature of Paretian welfare economics	124
5. Two kinds of interpersonal utility comparison	157
6. Distribution in Paretian welfare economics	181
7. Wicksell and Pareto: their relationship in the theory of public finance	214
8. Some notes on Pareto optimality and Wicksellian unanimity	240
9. A tale of two schools: comments on a new view of the ordinalist revolution	250
10. Hicks, Robbins and the demise of Pigovian welfare economics: rectification and amplification	272
Still more on the demise of Pigovian welfare economics: a reply to Nahid Aslanbeigui
Index	291