

Intergovernmental Relations and Economic Management in China

Jun Ma

Public Policy Specialist

The World Bank

Washington, DC

Contents

List of Tables	x
List of Figures	xi
List of Appendix Tables	xii
Acknowledgements	xiii
List of Abbreviations	xv
Introduction	1
1 Intergovernmental Fiscal Relations and Macroeconomic Management	5
Introduction	5
Revenue-sharing between the central and local governments	6
Division of expenditure responsibilities between the central and local governments	10
Basic propositions for assessing China's fiscal management system	11
The lack of fiscal policy instruments of the central government	13
Impaired performance of the central government's fiscal policy	19
The 1994 reform: tax-assignment system	24
Implications of the 1994 fiscal reform and remaining problems to be addressed	26
Conclusions	31
Appendix 1.1: macroeconomic management and local autonomy in Japan	32
2 Central Government Credibility and Local Tax Efforts: a Game Theoretic Model	35
Introduction	35
Cooperative regions: the bench-mark case	38
Non-cooperative regions: commitment versus no commitment	43
Why does the center not want to commit: a time-inconsistency explanation	48
Addressing the time-inconsistency problem	53

	The effect of the 1990 proposal – increasing the center's share of total revenue	64
	Concluding remarks	67
3	Central Government Transfer Under a Soft Budget Constraint	69
	Introduction	69
	Regions' lobbying under a hard budget constraint	71
	Regions' lobbying under a soft budget constraint	74
	Are regions better off with a soft budget constraint?	77
	Why do the regions choose to lobby ex post ?	78
	The Cournot game between regions and lobbying effectiveness	80
	The budget constraint problem under the center's commitment	84
	Concluding remarks	89
	Appendix 3.1: solving for optimal commitment tax rates for a given expenditure target	90
	Appendix 3.2: a comparison with Tullock (1980) and Becker (1983)	92
4	Intergovernmental Relations and Monetary Management	95
	Introduction	95
	Financial sector development before 1994	96
	The central bank's instruments of monetary control	98
	Money supply and macroeconomic stability	100
	Why cannot the central bank control money supply at the desired level?	102
	Reform cycles and monetary cycles	105
	Monetary reform in 1994	107
	Assessment of the 1994 monetary reform	109
	Conclusions	110
5	Central Government Credibility and Monetary Expansion: a Game Theoretic Model	112
	Introduction	112
	Literature on China's inflation	112
	Description of the credit allocation system	115
	The commitment regime	119
	The no commitment regime	120
	Comparison of equilibria under the commitment and no commitment regimes	123
	Conclusions	125

Appendix 5.1: deriving the equilibrium credit level under the no commitment regime	127
Appendix 5.2: solving for optimal additional credit (a) under the no commitment regime	130
Appendix 5.3: proof of $L^{nc} > L^c$	130
6 Intergovernmental Relations and Market Development	132
Introduction	132
Division of regulatory powers between the central and local governments	133
Impact of decentralization on the market system	137
Defining the limits of local government power: the relevance of international experience	147
Conclusions	153
Appendix Tables	154
End Notes	165
Bibliography	176
Index	184