

Military expenditure in Third World countries
The economic effects

Saadet Deger

Routledge & Kegan Paul
London, Boston and Henley

Contents

Preface	xiii
1 Introduction	1
1.1 Defence and the economy	1
1.2 The nature of the problem	2
1.3 What is development economics?	7
1.4 Militarisation and militarism	15
1.5 Economic effects of military expenditure: the framework	24
1.6 The structure of the book	29
2 The analysis of the data	37
2.1 Usage of data	37
2.2 The issues	40
(a) Definitions	41
(b) Price deflators	44
(c) Comparisons	49
2.3 The sources	53
3 Military spending and public expenditure	60
3.1 Defence and the budget	60
3.2 Economic development and government expenditure	61
3.3 Taxation	68
3.4 Budget deficit and money creation	72
3.5 Multipliers	75
3.6 Crowding out	80
4 Saving, investment and military expenditure	87
4.1 Capital formation	87
4.2 Miles and domestic saving	95
4.3 Investment	102

5 Human capital formation	112
5.1 The importance of human resources	112
5.2 Human capital formation and defence	116
(a) Spin-off	116
(b) Social attitudes	118
(c) Government revenue constraint	120
(d) Growth effects	122
5.3 Quantification	122
6 The military burden in the open economy	126
6.1 Arms exports	126
6.2 Trends in arms transfers	131
6.3 The cost of military imports	135
6.4 Conclusion	148
7 Arms production and the newly industrialising countries	150
7.1 Arms manufacture	150
7.2 Reasons for establishing arms industries	152
7.3 Strategies for industrialisation and arms production	155
7.4 Resource and import costs	176
8 Economic growth and military expenditure	185
8.1 The basic issues	185
8.2 The findings of Emile Benoit	187
8.3 Supply factors in growth	193
8.4 Aggregate demand and growth	200
8.5 Nonlinearities	203
9 Economic development and the military	210
9.1 Growth and development	210
9.2 Modernisation	212
(a) Brazil	215
(b) South Korea	216
(c) India	218
(d) Indonesia	219
9.3 Growth, conflict, structural change and the military	221
9.4 Economic entitlements and the military	230

10 Conclusion	242
10.1 What do we know?	242
10.2 The international forces	248
10.3 What can be done	251
Appendix An econometric evaluation of the military-growth relationship	255
A.1 Econometric models	255
A.2 The empirical issues	255
(a) Causality	255
(b) The sample set and choice of variables	258
(c) Estimation method	260
A.3 The econometric model	261
A.4 Concluding remarks	266
Notes	268
References	273
Name index	282
Subject index	284